

Dr. Schmidt Returns From Visit to Orient

An educated Chinese told the following to Dr. F. G. Schmidt, head of Oregon's German department, who spent the greater part of July and August traveling in the Orient.

"If the Japanese attack us again this year as they doubtless will, we will be defeated, because we are still unprepared. But in about five years we expect to be strong enough to beat off Japan." This attitude of "someday we will beat Japan" is prevalent in China, Dr. Schmidt says.

"The down-trodden, poverty stricken and illiterate peasantry of China, degraded as it is by internal discord, is still maintaining an offensive that only traditional hatred for Japan keeps going," explained Dr. Schmidt.

The German professor commented favorably on the extreme politeness of the Eastern race.

"The Japanese are an especially progressive people," he said. "I traveled from one end of the country to the other and saw only two beggars — even they were polite."

"They have a great respect for old age and have a great desire to please foreigners."

Dr. Schmidt declared that although living in Japan and China was cheap, making the East an ideal place for an interesting vacation, he would never again go in July and August as the heat makes living almost unbearable. He stopped for one day in Honolulu before crossing to Japan.

livery and used it constantly until one night the ball hopped and zipped too much and fractured the batter's skull. He stopped using this motion, but he thinks that with a little practice next spring, he can learn to control it quite well.

The Olympic village greatly impressed Sayles on his trip. Each nation had a unit to itself. Although one huge mess building fed them all, each nation ate food cooked by its own cooks in a private dining room. The village will be used as an army barracks for Hitler's crack regiment, he said.

Hitler, declared Sayles, outdid himself in providing for the comfort of his guests.

"But those German beds," He shook his head. "They are the worst damn things in the world to sleep on. The person sleeps on three cushions laid over a bedstead. A huge pillow under the head puffs out, around, and over the face, completely smothering a fellow until he learns the trick of sleeping on it. A quilt about the size of a mattress is the only covering."

"Most of the athletes" agreed that Eleanor Holm Jarrett should have been dropped from the team," he said.

After a few members of the team were warned against their imbibing in a mug of beer now and then, Eleanor continued to play around, drinking and kissing newspapermen, he explained. "Chic" mentioned seeing her highly swayed several times.

While in Europe, Sayles traveled in France, Belgium, Holland, Ireland, and England with the team. An English promoter wants the team to return to play exhibition ball in England next summer, Sayles said.

was formerly on the staff of the Spectator.

Sayles Tells

Sayles is the acme of good form on the mound, the result of Carl Mays' coaching. But, the Red Sox changed his throwing style so he could heave a sizzling inshoot with a hop on it. Being heretofore a straight overhand pitcher, Sayles, in his three weeks with the Red Sox, learned to pitch with a half-side arm-half overhand throw.
