Students Urged to Build Foundation of Nation For Common Good at General Assembly

Mastery of our emotions and elimination of our prejudices, the essential elements of good citizenship, can be accomplished only through education said F. M. Hunter, chancellor of the state education system, speaking before the assembly in his honor at Gerlinger Thursday morning.

Chancellor Hunter said that the biblical quotation, "Am I my brother's keeper?" is the basis upon which all acts of citizenship should be founded, and that this rule can be followed by the individual educating and informing himself to perform his duties as a citizen for the common good of the nation.

Good Citizenship Urged

"Don't go out of this University until your ability to function as a good citizen is built upon a sound foundation," he said.

Chancellor Hunter denounced the demagogues and pressure people's emotions and prejudices to further their own ends, and called upon citizens to learn to bring the spirit of history to bear upon the problems of the nation.

George Washington sacrificed prejudices, promises, and fame; he was discredited in the eyes of his people, because he used his knowledge to keep the nation out of war with Great Britain," he said, referring to the signing of the unpopular Jay treaty with England.

Dictator Problem Seen

Chancellor Hunter referred to the wave of dictatorships that has engulfed Europe, and warned that this is a serious problem confronting every citizen.

"You and I have the question of determining what our action will be in the presence of situations of this kind," he said.

The chancellor emphasized the fact that the democracy of the United States is much more far-reaching than any of the other democracies of the world, and that this increases the demand upon its citizens.

In opening his address, Chancellor Hunter complimented the University upon its cooperation in secure educational legislation, and expressed the wish that the duties of his office would allow him to come in closer contact with the student body.

Hunter's Work Praised

In introducing the chancellor, C. Valentine Boyer, president of the University complimented him upon his interest and activity in getting educational legislation passed in the recent session of the Oregon State legislature.

Before the chancellor's speech, Prince Callison, football coach, and Anson Cornell, athletic manager, drew the number of the student body card of Nello Giovanin from a basket, and Giovanini was given a free ticket to the Jimmy Dorsey dance.

Gilbert Schultz, student body president, congratulated the mile-relay team which was successful

Pioneer Mother Typifies Peace and Achievement Of Oregon's Forefathers

(Editor's note: This article is the second of a series which will tell the story behind interesting "landmarks" on the Oregon campus and which will appear in the Emerald from time to time.)

A new conception of a pioneer memorial, which shows not the struggles and hardships of the trail, but the spirit of peace and achievement, is the Pioneer Mother of which A. Phinister Proctor is the sculptor and which Burt Brown Barker, vice-president of the University of Oregon, dedicated. Although it honors his own mother, the memorial is dedicated to all Oregon pioneer mothers.

The Pioneer Mother, in the center of the women's quadrangle, rests on a base which has on each side a plaque showing some phase of the struggle over the Oregon trail. The design of the statue is very simple and depicts the Pioneer Mother, sitting at ease in her chair, her hands resting on an open Bible in her lap. Her face, strong in character, seems to be reflecting pleasant events of the past and contemplating what is to come in the future of the West.

Mrs. Barker Born 1844
Mrs. Elvira Chadwick Brown Barker, inspiration for the memorial, was born in Wilmington, Illinois, on July 6, 1844. Her father, Elias Brown, who died on the way, joined with his father-in-law, Tom Cox, in the spring of 1847 and started for Oregon with his family. The wagon train members suffered most while coming over the Barlow road when a storm became so severe that they lost half the cattle and saved their own lives only by extreme measures.

Thomas Cox brought with him a small stock of goods from a store he sold in Wilmington before he left and with it started the first store in Salem, Oregon. Mr. Barker's mother grew up on a farm near Philomath, where she married William C. Barker, June 27, 1860. She died in 1924.

Final Peace Cited
The inscription on the Pioneer Mother written by Burt Brown Barker on May 7, 1932 is:

"Others have perpetuated her struggles; I want to perpetuate the peace which followed her struggles. Others have perpetuated her adventure; I want to perpetuate the spirit which made the adventure possible, and the joy which crowned her declining years as she looked upon the fruits of her labor and caught but a faint glimpse of what it will mean for posterity.

"I want to recall her as I recall my mother, Elvira Brown Barker, a pioneer of 1847 in the sunset of her life after the hardships and the battles and the sorrows of pioneering were past and she sat in the afterglow of her twilight days resting from her labors. All her hardships and sorrows have softened

Graduation? More Fun, Less Talk, Say Students

Graduation day . . . that day of daze for the average high-school senior who has finished four, sometimes more, long years of grueling study(?) and other things. Graduation days . . . usually blistering hot. The local school decked out in gala colors and the graduating class in stuffy gowns. And what is the high-light of that memorable day? Or what should be . . . why the commencement speaker, of course.

At times a speaker will leave an unforgettable impression on the minds of the seniors, at other times a regrettable impression, and still other times, nothing at all.

What do students in speech here at the University remember about graduation day? About that man who addressed them? How do they think commencement programs can be improved?

In a recent questionnaire distributed to members of the speech classes, by way of gaining information for students in advanced speech who are now working on a graduation address project, some of the following enlightening comments were made:

"Commencement exercises are too formal."

"I would have one student speaker and one outside speaker. The student should talk on his impressions and reactions to graduation; the outsider should give a talk on what graduation should mean."

"Leave out the student speakers."

" . . . the scholarship students of our class gave the addresses and were they lousy. There wasn't a bit of value to the speeches, and the only point in the whole program was the splinter in my chair. I would provide for more amusing speeches, and, by all means, make them shorter. Also, I'd ask for good speakers, even if I had to buy them."

"The graduation class should choose the speaker."

"I would have the speaker talk less, say more, and talk in a lighter vein."

"I would cut out the long orations telling us how glad the world is to receive us. . ."

"Leave out the flowery talk."

"Make the ceremonies a bit shorter . . . too many officials saying the same thing."

"A good program by those grad-

"I think they should cut out the fashion-parade idea. Let the graduating class dress in simple, inexpensive, inconspicuous clothes."

"Most of the seniors in my class were too excited about their graduation, diplomas, etc. . . . to pay much attention to the speaker. It seemed to be mainly an entertainment of fond parents and friends."
