Martin to Be On Campus At Assembly

Governor Will Have Guard of Honor at First Student Body Meeting Thursday

Final arrangements were being made yesterday by University officials to welcome with full military honors Oregon's Gov. Charles H. Martin, who will visit the campus Thursday to speak at the first student assembly at 11, in Gerlinger hall.

The governor will be accorded a special guard of honor consisting of 150 ROTC cadets and the University band when he arrives at the assembly hall. The governor, a retired army general, will receive the first military ceremony in the history of the school.

Topic Announced

As his topic for the first student assembly of the year, the governor will speak on "Tradition and Present Day Affairs."

The remainder of the program will include the Oregon marching song written and directed by Hal Young, professor of voice, and a short greeting from Barney Hall, ASUO president.

To Inspect Libe

After the assembly an inspection tour of the new library will be made, followed by the Chamber of Commerce luncheon at the Eugene hotel. Plans are being made to have a representative group of student leaders in campus activities meet the governor at the luncheon.

Dr. C. V. Boyer, president of the University, will preside at the assembly, and Chancellor Frederick M. Hunter will introduce the guest. Plans for the reception and program during the governor's visit have been accomplished under the direction of Karl W. Onthank, dean of personnel.

President Boyer's message:

"For some time I have wanted to have Governor Martin come to the University and talk to the students. He is a man of exceptionally wide experience as a citizen, statesman, and army officer. He has been a constant friend of higher education since he has been in office and intensely interested in the welfare of the youth of this state. "Although his time is crowded by the engagements and business of his office, he has set aside Thursday to come to speak to the students upon matters of great importance to them because of his frank and whole-hearted interest in youth as they are and as future citizens. I am looking forward to hearty expressions of welcome on the part of students for this man who has shown his deep interest in their affairs."—C. Valentine Boyer, president.

Swing Music Drops

Enthusiastic "shaggers" and "big apples" may resent this, but a recent survey made on 30 college campuses reveals that "swing" had dropped to third place in favor with college crowds. Slow music of the smooth variety still rates tops. It is interesting to note that the three favorite standard tunes, "Star Dust," "Night and Day," and "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," are all of this variety.

Chinese Speech Easy

"Contrary to popular belief Chinese is the easiest language in the world to learn," declared Dr. W. F. Hummel, professor of Oriental studies at the University of Southern California. Stating that a course in second year Chinese will be offered at U.S.C. next fall, the professor explained that, because of its complete lack of verb conjugations, noun declensions, and gender, students in his beginning Chinese class this year have found it easier to learn than any other modern language.

Members of Alpha Omicron Pi sorority will be entertained by the Chi Psi at dessert tonight.

Resigns

Karl W. Onthank, dean of personnel, has given up the task of conducting NYA work in order to devote his entire time to his work as dean. Dean Onthank tendered his resignation yesterday.

Students will have an opportunity to give their opinions on school life and to listen to those of others if present plans for the new "Emerald of Air" program go through.

A series of interviews resembling the popular curbstone quiz is scheduled for the program which is to go on the air for the first time next week.

Definite information as to hour and station affiliations will be released later in the week.

An Oregon-Oregon State rally hook-up is being considered and may possibly go on over a national hook-up.

Forensics Squad To Discuss Current Questions on Tour

In the latter part of this month five veteran members of the forensics squad will travel to Bend and Redmond for several scheduled speeches before students and clubs. The discussions will concern two important current topics. One will be on the supreme court issue and the other on modern day government.

Numerous speaking tours will be made later in the year. However, this trip has been scheduled early because of the snow storms, mud, and rain which make the roads almost impassable during the winter and fall.

Men to make the trip tentatively are: Zane Kimbler of Pendleton; Ed Robbins of Massachusetts; Kessler Cannon of Toledo, Oregon; Howard Kessler of Canada; William Lebuski of Portland and Coach W. A. Dahlberg.

UO Alumnus Joins Staff of Research

Wayne Woodmansee, who received his master's degree at the University in 1930, has become a member of the research staff of the Oregon Bureau of Municipal Research. He is at present compiling a handbook on municipal government from material gathered by members of the board.

Girls Thrilled As False Alarm Brings Firemen

University students must play with fire!

Last night the second false fire alarm in four days was turned in via the University telephone exchange when report of a fire at Hendricks hall was given.

Bewildered firemen met bewildered students in front of the hall last evening when they arrived there at about 7 o'clock amid the clanging of bells and shrieking of sirens.

The girls in the hall had just finished dinner and all rushed out at the approach of the trucks in time to meet the slightly disillusioned fire-fighters.

The first false alarm from the University district was turned in about 1 o'clock Saturday morning when someone called the fire department but failed to give the location of the blaze. No trucks were sent out on the call, fire department headquarters said last night.

Giving false fire alarms is a misdemeanor according to Oregon law and is punishable by fine, fire officials warned.

young people have received jobs which enabled them to attend higher educational institutions throughout the state. Through another department about 3000 minors have been given vocational training in a variety of fields.

Greeted Roosevelt

Dean Onthank tendered his resignation yesterday following his return from Timberline lodge, near Mt. Hood, where he was on the committee which received President Roosevelt.

Ivan Munro will take over his duties as state administrator.

Will Advise Project

Dean Onthank has consented to act as advisory director of the Silver Creek recreational demonstration project, located near Silverton, Oregon. He has always had a great interest in this project. Its main purpose is to establish a large camp in which group camping may be carried on. There will be kitchens, cabins, and other conveniences for the campers. This work will be carried on by the national government; but it is very probable that it will later be handled by the state. WPA work will be used upon the project and it is expected over 300 men will receive jobs in this way.

Taken for a Ride

Bob DeArmond chauffeurs Peggy Vermillion in a trial heat to get in form in case the women win out in student body card sales. If the men put on a last-minute spurt to forge ahead of the women, Peggy will take her place as the power behind the wheel while Bob rides.

'Battle of the Sexes' Approaches Climax

The "battle of the sexes" featured in the ASUO card sales drive with Bobby "Duck" DeArmond, co-chairman for the men in one corner, and Peggy Vermillion, coed leader in the other, is nearing a close today with a free wheelbarrow ride for the winner in the offing.

When questioned yesterday as to the contest leader, DeArmond said, "the boys lead the girls by a large majority." Miss Vermillion deemed DeArmond's ultimatum as prejudiced and said, "the girls are far in the lead."

Sometime Friday the loser will have the task of wheeling the winner down Willamette street in a wheelbarrow.

ASUO card figures as so far released show approximately 1900 cards sold so far over 1864 for last year's entire fall term.

Magazine Praises Rowan's Art Work

By BETTY JANE THOMPSON

"I've Had A Tooth Ache." This title, accompanied by an amusing sketch, appears over an article praising the work of David J. McCosh, instructor in drawing and painting at the Oregon art school. The article, written by Edward B. Rowan, director of the division of painting and sculpturing of the U. S. treasury department, was printed in the September issue of the "Magazine of Art."

The frontispiece, "January, Oregon," is one of Mr. McCosh's oils reprinted in color.

Mr. McCosh received a commission from the treasury department to paint the murals for the post office at Kelso, Washington. He chose as his theme the Lewis and Clark expedition. He has also been commissioned to paint one of the large murals in the new department of the interior building in Washington, D.C.

Has Had Exhibits
Mr. McCosh has painted in France, England, Ireland, and Italy. He has had several one-man exhibits, one being at Cedar Rapids and another at Walker Galleries in New York.

Commenting on his work, Rowan says that it has "a strong individual and independent approach."

Blood-Soaked Cream Puff Vision Erases Joe

By MORITZ THOMSEN

Joe Jenks, pride of the Delta Kappa house came back to Oregon for his sophomore year. He told the boys about it, very proud. "The old man says, 'Nothing doing. You got a .9 G.P.A. all year,' so I pulled my pointing act and cried and stamped my feet 'til he gave in."

It was really Mr. Hulthen who killed him, I believe. "Look here, Jenks, you just can't go on with your military. Sixteen hours of that's enough. Now I suggest a little psychology. Dos Passos uses it extensively. It's quite a vital subject."

So Jenks signed up with Mr.

Leeper and the military department, and prepared to make the best of a pretty tough year. It all started about the middle of the third week, when for some as yet unexplained reason Joe studied at the library one night.

Inhibitions, and conditioned reflexes were the things he read about, but the vague ideas that started from the pages got about half way to his eyes, then paled and fled back into print. He read about a dream, then, and probably for the first time, he really saw that printed page. It explained in pretty technical terms the phenomena of dreams, how they were a symbol of the conscious mind and some object that the mind had fixed upon.

"Well, I'll be jiggered," Joe Jenks said.

Things happened pretty quickly after that. He spent his waking hours analyzing dreams. He figured out the one he had about the glass of beer with skirts on that he spent half the night chasing around on a desert island. After all, what could be more obvious?

But then his dreams became more complicated. He dreamed of vague, huge shapes that crossed his bed at night, of cream puffs soaked in blood that dropped into big pools of greenish ink. And Jenks was baffled. It got to be an obsession, this analysis of dreams, and as he marched all day upon the field, doing his manual of arms and all the other things that happen on the military field, disturbing thoughts went through his head.

At the house he seemed quite normal, a little more quiet now perhaps, but still the same old Jenks, until one day, he stepped up to the president and asked him what a dream about a canary with big hip boots could mean. They watched him after that, growing concern that he was slipping, and they were right. Before two weeks had passed it was almost over.

Joe Jenks would stop people on the streets—even freshmen—and confound them with his baffling problems. He'd stop them as they walked from class to class oblivious of the thoughts within Jenks' suffering brain. He'd say and what about this flour mill that burned and left meat grinders walking after me? He died one night; screaming about a pencil sharpener and it's significance as a symbol, as a key to his walking hours upon the earth.

As I have intimated, Mr. Hulthen was at the bottom of it all. Jenks couldn't stand to think. It finally killed him. It was a shame, but do you see Mr. Hulthen hang his head in shame? Oh no, he still strides from class to Taylor's for his coffee, walking fast with long brave steps. He doesn't care.

Fie on you Mr. Hulthen.
