

Famous Soprano Will Appear as Homecoming Ends

Galli-Curci's Arrival to Be Feted Today

Tickets Yet Available For Singing Star's Concert on Sunday Afternoon

Climaxing a week of celebrities Galli-Curci, international coloratura soprano, will follow the Johnson choir and Paul Whiteman into McArthur court at 3:15 tomorrow afternoon.

The singer, who has been received by the aristocracy of Europe will be welcomed with one of Oregon's royalist homecoming receptions upon her arrival at 11:30 this morning.

Under the sponsorship of the greeting committee Barney Hall, ASUO president, will welcome the visitor and the University band and rally committee will add color to the occasion. Following the official welcome Galli-Curci will be paraded through Eugene to the campus.

Desires Rest
Although arrangements for her stay at the University are uncertain, because of an expressed desire to rest from her trip until the time of her concert Sunday afternoon the faculty has taken steps to see that she is not disturbed.

Since her throat operation and retirement a few years ago the famous soprano has been referred to as the new Galli-Curci because of a slight change of voice effected, giving her singing a new quality which critics acclaim as even superior to the original.

Husband Accompanies
She will be accompanied tomorrow by her husband, a well-known American pianist and composer.

Galli-Curci, one of the few self-taught singers of today, has performed in practically every civilized country in the world. Italian by birth she made her first American appearance in Chicago in 1916 and has made her home in this country since.

Master Printer Nash Sets Type Every Day

"I set type every day of my life. I never wander off to do big things," John Henry Nash, one of the outstanding printers of contemporary times, told Allen Allen's editing class in an informal interview yesterday.

Although the little shop on Sansome street, San Francisco, has now grown until it occupies the top floor of the John Henry Nash building, the famous artist says helping, and will not accept so much work that any of it would have to be rushed through. His "Life of Dante," in four volumes, he considers the finest piece of printing his shop has ever turned out. He worked on it about six years.

Takes Care in Work
"I watched the last page as carefully as the first," he declared in relating the printing of the job. "The paper for the 'Dante' was ordered so that I could print two pages at a time instead of eight," he explained. "That way I could watch the distribution of ink on every page."

Paper for Mr. Nash's books comes from Holland. The "Dante" he had bound in vellum at a cost of $10 per volume in Germany. The type for the work came from Italy. After it had arrived, he discovered the foundry had cast no "w". When he had this letter added, it proved to be less than "type high" and each time it was used it had to be raised by placing a sheet of paper under it.

Receives $40,000 From Hearst
The most he ever received for the printing of a single volume was $48,000 paid him by William R. Hearst for 1,000 copies of a life of Hearst's mother. When he was first called in, Hearst insisted the book be done with illustrations. Mr. Nash declined the job, but when he heard that Hearst wanted to do it as he wanted to, and found the renowned publisher well pleased with the completed book.

Mr. Nash's father, a mechanical engineer, wanted his son also to study for the engineering profession. "I was born to be a printer," he firmly declared yesterday. "I threatened to run away from home after working six months in a foundry." He entered a printing establishment and fulfilled the requirements for the rank of master printer, usually requiring a seven-year apprenticeship.

seats still available and tickets can be obtained until noon tomorrow at the Igloo or at the door immediately before the concert.

In Alumni Program Spotlight

Basil Williams, above, and Ben Chandler, right, are among the alumni who will have a big part in the homecoming weekend program. Mr. Williams spoke last night at the big bonfire; Mr. Chandler will lead the alumni meeting in the library's browsing room this morning.

Budding Journalists Will Rock Campus

Today neophytes of Sigma Delta Chi, men's journalism honorary, after long and rigorous training will be brought forth for the world to view and applaud at 11:30 "unofficial" dedication ceremonies for the new libe. Costumed in the hues of the rainbow, they will be prepared to offer a program that will rock the civilization of man clear down to the sub-basement and even past the bargain counter.

Six-count 'em, ladies and gentlemen—six beautiful boys will be shoehorned into one of the tiny balconies overlooking the libe's court. The signal will be given, the program will commence, and Oregon's greatest dramatic offering will be under way.

The site of the program was chosen with an aim to keeping off admiring throngs which always pursue matinee idols. Also back of much cash that he will be a brash individual indeed who will hoist a boulder in their direction.

Officials Withhold Dope
Little detail can be given about the program, for high officials in Sigma Delta Chi, contacted late last night, would say little other than that their proteges were sleeping like babes and would be in there giving their all on the morrow. Even the names of the stars were guarded like Mussolini taking a Cook's tour through Ethiopia, but it was rumored that the cast would be as follows: Warren Waldorf, Norman Scott, Bill Cummings, Mat Kramer, Bill Lammie, and Kenneth Webber.

Prep Newspapers To Be Considered Twice by Judges
Judging of the papers entered in the high school newspaper contest, to be held October 29 and 30 under the supervision of Sigma Delta Chi, journalism honorary, will be done in two steps, Howard Kessler, contest head, announced yesterday. The five best papers in each of the five divisions will be selected by University journalism students and submitted to the journalism faculty for final place awards.

The judges in the various fields are: advertising, Bill Pease; copy editing, Bob Pollock; art, George Bikman; features, Hubard Kuokka; news, Darrel Ellis; make-up, Lloyd Tupling; editorial, Paul Deutschmann.

The five divisions in which papers will be judged are: best mimeographed paper, best news notes in a general newspaper, best paper in a school of less than 500 pupils, best paper in a school of more than 500 pupils, and best high school newspaper in the state as a division in which all other winners are automatically entered. Winners in each division will be awarded a cup symbolic of their triumph.

Iowa, have visited here and, it is believed, been interviewed by board members.

Remer Visits
The 48-year-old nominee, Dr. Remer, visited with faculty members, discussing educational questions, and it was believed that he had been informally interviewed by members of the faculty advisory council. The council has been cooperating with the chancellor in naming the list, all of whom are believed to have expressed their willingness to be considered.

Selection Awaits Interviews
It is known that the visitor, an authority on world economics and oriental trade, is favored by many of the groups on the campus.

No selection will be made until the board has talked to several of the candidates, it was announced at the time of the last meeting, but the necessary interviews may have been made by Monday in an attempt to conclude the work and announce it after the session.

General Admission Ducats Not All Sold

Emergency Seating Plans Made in Case Of Sell-Out

Rushing business at ASUO ticket offices, a complete sellout of local hotel accommodations, and increasing activity at the alumni housing bureau pointed Friday to a homecoming of record-breaking proportions.

A brisk demand for game tickets was reported by ASUO ticket offices at McArthur court, with approximately 2,000 good general admission seats remaining to be sold. Plans were being made for emergency seating accommodations in case of a complete sellout. Reserved seating has been sold out for ten days.

Reinforced by additional lists of available weekend quarters for the homecoming crowds, the alumni housing bureau settled down to the task of arranging housing for visitors. Considerable registration had taken place already Friday afternoon. No difficulty is expected by the bureau in taking care of all comers.

The prospect of continued favorable weather was expected to contribute heavily to attendance figures at homecoming events.

Hockley, who was recently named regional director of the PWA; Folger Johnson, Mr. Hockley's assistant; Fred Cuthbert, of the University faculty connected with landscaping; Arthur Clough, designer and executor of the wood carved panels, and Charles T. Diamond, local PWA engineer.

Containing approximately 282,000 accessioned volumes, 10,000 books are added annually to the library through purchase, gifts, and exchanges. About 2,620 periodicals and 150 newspapers are regularly received.

The pleasant storage facilities and ample book-storage rooms are physical assets of great importance. Constructed of reinforced concrete and faced with brick, the building is planned for maximum usability and economy of space, and for ease of expansion.

OSC Boys Slip Fast One Over On Freshmen

By WEN BROOKS
Believe it or not, Oregon Staters who burned the letters "OSC" on the turf at Hayward Friday night had been mixing with Oregon frosh all evening, acting the part of freshmen breaking the field.

The break came when regular freshmen guards went to get coffee, leaving three "Staters" to guard the gate. The boys from OSC quickly carried buckets of gasoline out on the field and set to work.

Freshmen, spotting the flames, came running. They discovered their "supposed" fellow guards had skipped in a car with pals from Corvallis.

The dripping orange letters "OSC", slopped on the sides of the Alpha Chi O girls green crate are really quite conspicuous, don't you think?

Probably the loveliest latrinity seen about the campus lately is the ADP's blue terror, beauty personified on four wheels and all for the benefit of the iron lung.

Paul Whiteman comes to Eugene Friday with a guarantee of one thousand berries. Should receipts go over that figure, the maestro will get 65 per cent of the intake.

Incidentally, Daniel D. Gage, father of Professor Gage of the BA school, lived for a time at the Whiteman home in Denver, Colorado, back in 1849. The great "King of American Jazz" was then a kid three years old. All the Whiteman family, according to Mr. Gage, who now lives in Los Angeles, were very musically inclined.

Chan Berry opened his mouth, only to have the leg of a chair thrust in it at the little mixer at the SPE house Thursday night. Chan was provoked, naturally.

And did you know that students in one class on the campus work puzzles? Yes, and get grades for doing the things in Dr. L. F. Beck's elementary psych lab, where the processes one goes through in solving puzzles are studied.

Chi Psi and Phi Psi gridsters evidently believe in the importance of having "lots of sleep" before a game. Members of both aggregations are staging a street dance.

Blond Paul Rowe, 200-pound full-back, is expected to rival Oregon State's Kolbert in blocking, running, and that all-important defensive work. But why speak of individual players. Let's go out this afternoon, and see what Oregon and Oregon State do against each other in their 41st meeting. It'll be worth the walk.
