

Frosh Will Reconsider Benson's Vote 'Reform' At Class Meeting Soon

First Year Prexy Predicts Acceptance of Plan If Present Misunderstanding Is Removed Through Definition

By DICK LITFIN

The frosh controversy over acceptance or rejection of ASUO Vice-President Noel Benson's political "reorganization bill" will be settled early next week at a class meeting, Gleason "Tiger" Payne said last night.

At a joint freshman-sophomore class meeting a week ago, the proposal met success in the soph class, but objections raised by frosh not fully understanding the proposal caused it to be tabled.

Payne predicted last night that the misunderstanding would be erased and the plan consolidating both ASUO and class elections on the same day would be adopted.

Centralized Control

Benson's plan calls for creation of a central election committee composed of ASUO officers, Dean Earl, and the four class presidents to control all elections which are scheduled for May 5.

The central committee will have three assisting election boards to handle the three class elections. The central committee will control the ASUO election.

It was voted in the soph class at last week's frosh-soph meeting to allow each of the two competing presidential nominees to name three on their particular board, with the class president naming a seventh member as chairman.

Cards to Be Controlled

Further powers of the central committee will be to require students to purchase class cards in person, to prohibit proxy voting, and suspend class card sales five days before elections.

The frosh class plans to hold its election by the nomination-election method of completing both functions at the same class meeting.

The sophomore and junior classes will use the primary nomination a week before elections, with the Australian ballot being used.
