Oregon Coeds Rebel Against Some Unforgivable Sins of Men

By EVA ERLANDSON

Unforgivable sins a man commits, according to University of Oregon coeds, range from smoking cigars and ogling girls in the street to talking about a shady past and forgetting the little courtesies in life that count.

Rising up in response to the question, "What do you think are five unforgivable sins in a man?", the girls were almost unanimous in their disapproval of the "Joe College" type, petting on first dates, and drinking excessively. However, surprisingly enough, only three had any serious objections to dirty cords, the rest either having no strong objections, or actually preferring them.

Some girls had a difficult time to see many unforgivable sins in a man, while others named five readily and went on from there. Betty Riesch, blond, blue-eyed Pi Phi president, declared readily: "I don't like chewing tobacco and I hate cigars. I resent fresh remarks and actions directed toward any woman. I also dislike heartily Joe Colleges and bad English."

Blanche McClellan, one of the princesses in Queen Virginia's court for Junior weekend, admitted reluctantly she couldn't see many things wrong with men. (Perhaps it was because Dick Litfin was around): "That's a hard question to answer, I think. I don't like men to talk too much, and I don't like the self-centered type. I think it's awful when a boy thinks he can dance when he can't and tries out a lot of fancy steps for you. As for dirty cords, I really prefer them, that is, if they aren't too dirty."

Lorraine Larson, sophomore in arts and letters offered: I don't like men who forget courtesies to elderly people. I hate the gaudy, noisy, Joe College type, because there's nothing to them. I don't like the self-centered men or those that try to show off. I hate chewing tobacco. I also dislike a boy to insist upon a girl to smoke or drink when she doesn't care to.

Margery Bates, dark-haired Kappa junior, chosen this year as the feminine half of the ideal student couple, contributed: I don't like conceit. If there's anything I can't stand it's a conceited man. I don't like excessive drinking when on a date and I don't like over-egotists who are always talking about the wonderful things they can do. Furthermore, I don't care for the rah rah college type with a lack of ambition.

Patsy Warren, recent pledge to Phi Theta Upsilon, junior women's advisory board, also had a ready reply: I think it's a sin when boys forget that it's the little things and courtesies in life that count. The second sinner is the smarty, and third, I don't like boys that make slurring remarks about girls. Fourth, I dislike boys who think they are giving you the break in your life by taking you out, and fifth, I hate men that PRETEND they are Hard To Get!

Elisabeth Stetson, AWS president, said: I don't like men to call up and ask what kind of flowers you want and then send gardenias anyway. I don't like black cigars nor dirty cords. I hate men to call up about 8 o'clock Saturday or Sunday morning, and I hate men to spend half the evening talking to the house mother when you are in a hurry to get to the dance. Another thing I hate is after the dance, when you try to be economical and order a 5-cent coke, and he goes ahead and orders an expensive sundae.

A poll of 20 University women brought the following table of answers on the unforgivable sins of men as the women see them. All questions began with: "Can you stand a man who—"

The Coed of the Week

CLARE IGOE

By BERNADINE BOWMAN

"For manners are not idle but the fruit of loyal nature and noble mind."

This is the inscription on the Gerlinger cup which was awarded to Clare Igoe just a year ago last Friday. On that same day she was taken into Mortar Board—all in all making it one of the most eventful days in her life.

Clare was practically put out of her happy home the other day when her two brothers returned home to find the Gerlinger cup gone. They demanded to know where the prized "jug" was, but they were appeased when they learned she had relinquished it since it is to be awarded for the twenty-first time to the most typical, all-around junior girl on the campus. The cup is annually awarded at the junior prom.

The four years that Clare has been in college have not been easy ones. She has been entirely self-supporting and has overcome obstacles that would have stopped the average girl.

Has Philosophy

Her philosophy in college has been the same one she will apply to life afterwards and that is—to do a thing well one has to go at it with everything he has. In other words, unless you care a great deal for the thing you are doing it will not be a success.

Clare's sparkling wit has won her recognition as a columnist. To know Clare is to know that anything she says in her column is not intended to hurt anyone's feelings but that it is all in fun.

Earns Own Way

In order to put herself through school she has done several kinds of work. Her most interesting job was writing publicity last summer for the Oregon Trail pageant. She has also worked in the cannery, done office work, and sung at the Park.

When Clare entered school, she intended to take drama and music, but soon found her main interests to be in writing. She is still interested in them and would like to be a drama or music critic.

She likes to read anything but detective stories. One of her favorite magazines is the new one called "You." Her main ambition now is to get on the staff of a

I CAN BE HAD BUT NOT for LONG!!

Dear Coed and Ed:

Friday I'll come out in my new raiment. You should see me in my "natural color" finery. My clothes are a combination of the latest in local and foreign creations. My underclothes were designed by that ace creator, Shelton-Turnbull-Fuller. My new coat was planned by those outstanding artists, Bushong & Co.

I am a wealth of personality because I reflect you; and I can tell you of interesting things I've seen and done last year.

Sincerely,

YOUR 1938 OREGANA

P. S. I haven't a date for Friday—but not for long. See me at the Co-op.
