

First Concert Program Set By Symphony

No Dull Moments Promised; Scene is Music Auditorium, November 22

Popular symphonic music of color and contrast "without a headache or a boring moment" is promised by Rex Underwood when he directs the University symphony orchestra in concert at the school of music auditorium on November 22.

Three soloists of high repute in the Northwest will appear with the 70-piece orchestra. These soloists will be contributed by Halfred Young, tenor, John H. Stehn, clarinetist, and Mayo Sorenson, flutist, all instructors in the school of music.

Nearly New Program

With the exception of "Onaway, Awake Beloved," by Coleridge-Taylor, none of the selections have been presented in Eugene before. Mr. Underwood said. A romantic suite, "Impressions of Italy," by Charpentier, was recently played by the Standard symphony orchestra over NBC and received popular acclaim.

Although many of the selections on the program were composed nearly a century ago, they are modern in idiom and treatment, Mr. Underwood said. This is especially noticed in the "Mother Goose Suite" by Maurice Ravel. The five movements in this group are totally unlike that composer's sensuous "Bolero." Mr. Underwood considers them the most thoroughly modern of the compositions on the program.

Politicos' Student Life Outlined by Professor

Even Oregon's political leaders were only students once, Dr. H. D. Sheldon, professor of history and education, disclosed when he related the past of several of the state's politicians.

The editor of the first paper put out by the University, the Reflector, was A. E. Reames, United States senator, appointed to the position by Governor Martin when Frederick Steiwer resigned.

In 1891, at the time of the Reflector, there were approximately 150 students in the University. It was published by the members of the two literary societies, the Laureane and the Eutaxine. Because of the objections the students raised when the faculty decided to censor the paper, Reames was compelled to resign his position.

Steiwer, whose place Reames filled upon his resignation, was football manager here for a year. He attended school in Corvallis before coming to the University.

Homer Angell, now running for Congress in the Portland district, won the state oratorical championship in 1899. He was editor of the Oregon Monthly, which preceded the Emerald, and was also prominent in student affairs and the athletic association. He graduated from the University in 1900.

Fred Fiske, collector of the Port of Portland and prominent Democratic war horse, won the state oratorical contest the same year. He graduated from here in 1897.

J. R. Mott, congressman of the Willamette valley district who is now up for re-election, was also an active student orator and debator.

Henry L. Hess, candidate for governor, is a graduate of the University of Oregon law school. He attended the school when it was held in the evenings in Portland. He graduated in 1914.

Duck Tracks

California sports writers practically killed Stanford's attendance and prestige for the season, after the 22 to 0 loss to unbeaten Santa Clara, by saying the Indians weren't worth writing about let alone see.

Stanford scored 27 points against Oregon, which to Mikulak is a mystery, as he figures Tiny Thornhill's offense is lacking. Rushing statistics against the Ducks will substantiate that.

Beaten to the draw . . .

By seven days, Hec Edmundson, University of Washington's veteran basketball coach, beats Oregon's Hobby Holson in opening fall basketball practice.

"Uncle Hec" — who wishes to gosh people wouldn't call him Uncle — looked over his Huskies Monday to usher in drill which will last almost continuously into March.

Hobby's Oregon boys have been working out unofficially for some time, but don't get the official call until next Monday. From then on it'll be hard work for the Webfoots as they are facing a tough December barnstorming tour of the East which includes Madison Square Garden.

Fans in Los Angeles are hailing a return of the Trojan warhorse of old . . . Howard Jones, who is rumored to be working this fall without a contract, has brought his Southern California eleven home a winner in its last four starts . . . USC lost its first game to Alabama, 19 to 7, and since then has beaten Oregon State, Ohio State, Washington State, and Stanford in order to gain a first-place tie with California for the top . . . Mike Mikulak figures UCLA's tremendous 33 to 0 victory over Idaho was due greatly to where it was played . . . the Bruins of Bill Spaulding are tough to beat on their own lot.

Santa Clara, whose unbeaten Broncos are threatening to steal the limelight on the coast, have a great freshman team coming along . . . Southern California's frosh are called the "Troababes" . . . 25,000 fans watched UCLA whip Idaho . . . the same number trudged to the Coliseum in Palo Alto to watch Stanford lose to Troy . . . Oregon's game there didn't draw nearly as many because California was playing in Berkeley not many miles away . . . Kansas State, Drake and Ohio State, all failed to score on Northwestern . . . Mickey Anderson, one of Southern California's speediest backs, easily does the hundred in less than ten seconds . . . Honest John Warren's frosh footballers won the mythical yearling title of the Northwest in 1936 . . . they lost it to the Washington Babes, a team they play Saturday, in 1937 in Portland.
