Art Prints Attacked

By LOIS HULSER

War has been declared! Not by a mobilized army with a list of political grievance pages long, but by a horde of innocent little lepisma saccharinia with an insane obsession for art prints, especially in colors of delicate blue, and delicious book bindings. The art school is on the defensive and officials have agreed that arbitration can be considered no longer. The break in the crisis came when valuable prints were used by the silverfish, lepisma saccharinia to form a banquet, probably insect Mortar Board.

Munitions were in the making all day yesterday and active war was opened last night. Results of the first attack have not yet reached the nearest communique at the "shack." Officials of the administration felt confident late yesterday that the plans for the first invasion were infallible.

The administration hoped that its first campaign would subdue the invaders when they encountered the mines laid for them. Rolled paper covered with a thin coating of starch paste in which has been mixed a little powdered arsenic will prove attractive to the silverfish, scientists have told bewildered art school officials. After a meal so prepared the silverfish usually retire from active duty and leave the destruction of book bindings and other starch soaked things to their relatives or other creatures.

University Gets Botany Books

The University of Oregon botany department has been given a collection of 23 volumes on United States wild flowers. The portfolios consist of photographs of hand-colored flowers and have been prepared by Archibald R. Livingston. Included in the group are a number of illustrations from Oregon counties, Colorado, and California.

'High Tor' Combines Old, New

Something old—something new—something different—something different—something like Maxwell Anderson's play, "High Tor," combines a variety of the ancient and modern drama with an original imagination and makes a Broadway hit which will be produced in the University theater Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday.

Borrowing Shakespeare's blank verse medium, Anderson mixes it with the popular prose of the stage today for the actors' lines.

Combines Plots

His "High Tor" plot also combines the old and the new with fantasy, having a pastoral hero confronted by 20th century rascally real estate men wanting to buy his mountain estate, "High Tor" for its quarry stones deposit. The appearance of Hendrik Hudson's ghostly crew gives the fairy tale tone.

Cast Members

Members of the cast are: Fred Waller as Van Dorn; Charlene Jackson, Judith; Rose Ann Gibson, Lise; Adrian Martin, Indian; Henry Korn, Biggs; Ethan Newman, Skimmerhorn; James Parsons, Asher; Bob Hecker, Pieter; Frank Calhoun, DeWitt; Gerald Bowerly, Dope; Charles Boice, Elkers; Sweetie-Pie Butzin, Buddy; Parker McNeil, Patsy; Jack McCliment, Budge; Major H. L. Barrett, Senior; and sailors, Jerry Lakefish, Ludd Schmidt, and Al Weistein.

Capsules Say Sleep Or Else: Infirms Affirm It

According to legend, an aspirin in a coke will give you all the effects of over-indulgence in intoxicating beverages, and there are schools of thought that say emphatically it will not.

There are no differences of opinion as to the effects of the infirm's yellow capsules to make you sleep, according to the campus hospital's currently oldest inhabitants, Robin Nelson and Penny Singleton.

Penny and Robin each took one, and soon noticed that the walls were wavering and their beds seemed to be moving over a little when they tried to get back into them. The girls say the capsules are quite effective.

Other students who are in bed missing the spring weather are Jane Montgomery, Levelle Walstrom, Marjorie Phipps, Alice Clark, Peggy Robins, Glenn Williams, Bob Skelley, Donald Peterson, John Taylor, Gordon Perkins, and Charles Gorsage.
