Infirmary Notice
To the Emerald:

Due to an increase in the number of cases of measles being taken care of in the Student Health Service hospital there will be no visiting until further notice. We regret the necessity for taking this precaution, but in view of the danger involved to visitors and the difficulty in having the nurses on duty take care of the large number of patients and also check the isolation of many of our patients, it seems necessary to eliminate all visiting.

'No Place Like Home'

Big shot is Jean Cassidy, sophomore member of the rifle team who visited Seattle last weekend for a match with the University of Washington's team.

Jean's intelligent brown eyes not only hit the mark with people but also with the target. She started out as a novice in rifle this fall and was promoted to the team in no time at all.

"We had a wonderful time in Seattle," said Jean. "It was very foggy—we had to start places a half hour ahead of time, but we saw a basketball game at the University of Washington, and we also saw the army on the way up to Seattle."

The girls in Jean's group drove up with Captain W. E. Read of the Oregon ROTC barracks.

"We stopped at Fort Lewis and Fort Vancouver; there were four of us girls and 45,000 soldiers. Everyone of us ate all the

Value of Dam

Bonneville Power
Being Badly Used

By PEGGY KLINE

"Electro chemical and metallurgical industries are the birthright of Bonneville dam and of Oregon," stated Dr. E. F. Hodge, professor of economic geology at Oregon State College, in his lecture last night in the faculty room of Friendly.

Bonneville is one of the most remarkable dams in the world and is located on the largest river of the Pacific coast of either North or South America. Its site on the tide water of the Columbia makes it a natural location for industrial plant and shipping activities, according to the speaker. It is nature's gift to the future.

Dr. Hodge told his audience that for many years geologists had searched for a suitable place to dam the lower Columbia and reported absolutely no success. The project was set aside as impossible because of the soft clay type of rock in the formation of the north wall of the river gorge. When engineers found that nature had stepped into the picture with a land bed and provided the necessary bed rock for a foundation, many of these former "critics" were unable to accept the fact that the dam was not only possible but practical.

"I made a considerable sum of money answering letters from all over the country which said the dam wouldn't work," said the speaker. He was one of the consulting geologists who decided it would. Some of these letters even came from officials in the president's office.

He explained that possible danger from further movement of the landslide was ruled out by the straight growth of trees and the stability of railroads.

At the present time the power manufactured at Bonneville is not being put to its rightful use, he said. Industry is the destiny of a power source located on the edge of the ocean on one of the world's trade routes. "I regret every day that it is being used for anything else," the geologist stated.

"I believe that the ultimate task of Bonneville will be to produce products of the future. The possibilities of a western steel industry and magnesium plants are unlimited. We have only just nibbled at the rich things possible to man."

Plays Selections
Of French Artists

That famed Polish patriot and pianist, Ignace Jan Paderewski, probably would have been proud of the performance given Tuesday night in the music auditorium in his honor by Aurora Potter Underwood, pianist and associate professor of music in the University school of music.

Mrs. Underwood chose her program wisely, avoiding both the spectacular and the hackneyed selections frequently heard in the concerts of professional pianists. Her evening group, which included compositions from the French composers, Rameau and Saint-Saens, put the audience in a responsive mood that was held till the conclusion of the program. One of the most difficult "little" pieces of the concert, "Nocturne for the left hand" by Scriabine, proved to have melody as well as novelty as performed by Mrs. Underwood's capable hands. Maintaining her reputation as an adept interpreter of Brahms and Chopin, the soloist offered groups from the works of each of these composers.

It was true tribute to the pianist that the audience seemed to enjoy these compositions as much as if they were "old favorites," which many of them will be now that they have been interpreted by Mrs. Underwood.

Mass Meeting in Gerlinger on Thursday

With an air of mystery surrounding the list of nominees, Oregon women will gather Thursday at 11 o'clock in the Gerlinger assembly hall to choose next year's officers in the AWS, WAA, and YWCA.

Outgoing presidents in these three top all-campus women's organizations are: Betty Buchanan, AWS; Joanne Riesch, WAA; and Jean Crites, YWCA.

According to the new amendment to the constitution, adopted February 7, the names of the candidates will not be revealed until the mass-meeting. Voting will take place immediately after introduction of the candidates.

Nominations, according to the constitutional amendment, may be made from the floor in addition to the two names put up by the nominating committee.

The amendment was adopted, under the sponsorship of Mortar Board, senior women's honorary, to help in directing the trend of campus politics away from bloc formation.

The nominating committee consists of senior women of the AWS cabinet. They include: Joanne Riesch, Barbara Pierce, Janet Goresky, Jean Crites, Barbara Warner, Betty Buchanan, president of the organization, and Dean of Women Hazel P. Schwing, adviser.

Thursday Night
At Guild Hall

The play production class of the drama division will present three one-act plays Thursday evening in Guild hall.

Each of the three groups is composed of University students and is working under a student director, the entire production being under the supervision of Mrs. Ottilie T. Seybolt, director of drama.

A unified setting has been devised to accommodate all three plays, although each has lighting effects peculiar to the style of the play. The program will be presented in Guild hall, on the main floor of Johnson, Thursday evening at 7:30. All University students are invited to see the plays; admission is free.

Mary Staton, University Theater player, is directing "Moonset," a Peace Playwriting contest winner. The play concerns a group of soldiers trapped in a desert, waiting for sunrise, with the knowledge that the dawn will enable the enemy to detect them.

Jean Horton has charge of a play concerning the love affairs of three sisters, entitled "Little Darling." In the play, the sophisticated sister fights the demure sister for the admiration of the football hero, while the real power underneath the triangle is the younger sister, the "Little Darling."

The third play, "Love Song," being directed by George Smith, is the tragic portrait of a woman and her beautiful love for her husband and son.
