

Flowers and Spring

By CORINNE WIGNES

Your "best beau" will be going home for his vacation soon now and you will want to know if he is thinking of you, fair maiden. First find a dandelion that has gone to seed and then blow away the down. If after three puffs there is a single feather left, you may rest assured you are not forgotten.

Also, if you haven't time to write him a letter twice a day, pick up another feathery bloom and whisper a tender message for each one of the downy petals. Blow them toward the direction your loved one is. The feather will always carry the messages faithfully (no postage required).

Roses and Love

Just as the queer flower, the rose, is a symbol of love, so all flowers have traditions and legends associated with them. Ladies in the olden days gave their knights a violet to wear as a symbol of faithfulness, and when the first Napoleon left for Elba, it was said that he would return with violets. During his absence the flower was the secret badge of his adherents. Of course a violet might get rather "droopy" if worn every day during spring vacation, but if she doesn't want to wear one you know she won't be faithful to you!

Of course it isn't fair for him to know how much you care for him, so you have to find out if he really loves you also. The "he-loves-me, he-loves-me-not" method of plucking the petals of a daisy is by far the simplest but it has not always been accurate. The day before you leave (and if he is still here) get up early and find a bachelor button with the dew still on it. Then rush to his house and tell him he must carry it in his pocket and not "peek" at it. Go back in 24 hours and if the color is still bright and fresh his love for you is really "true blue," and you can wear the violet all during vacation. However, if the bachelor button is faded you will know that your love is not returned and you had better wear a narcissus. In the cup in the yellow center it is said the tears of ill-fated youth may be found. You may also send him one for the Mortar Board ball to show that you know just how fickle he is.

Orchids and Elite

Orchids are the elite among the flowers and undoubtedly lead in the fashion world, but if you are the clinging vine type, you had better not hint around for an orchid for the Junior Prom, but be content with the gardenias you will get.

The pansy, a sister of the violet, has many names and may be used for many occasions. It is often called heartsease, love-in-idleness, cuddle-me-to-you, johnny-jump-up, and kiss-me-at-the-garden-gate.

The problem of having many suitors is always solved by the use of the thistle, the flower of austerity and independence. The maiden must take the heads of thistles, cut off their points, give each flower the name of a person, and put them under her pillow. (If there isn't enough room under her own, she may also use her roommate's pillow). The one that puts forth a new sprout loves her best. Of course she must be careful not to move during the night or the sprout may be crushed and she will never know who loves her most.

But then, "first loves float from the memory like thistledown in a breeze," and there's always canoeing on the mill-race to encourage new romance for spring term.

FOR TEA AND TOWN

Oh, Yummy!

Spring! And Charlotte Collins, Ann Carr, and Barbara Todd gambol over the campus in their bright red, brown and green wash skirts with the Hawaiian pattern. Russ Hudson comes out in a pair of brown and white sports shoes and a tan shirt in a smart in-VEST-ment of the same color. Betty Wheeler wears a white lacy blouse with a red suede belt. Pat Erickson is feminine as cologne in a white batiste blouse which peeks innocently out from a pink sweater. Hope Hughes wears a violet blue sweater the color of her eyes. Barbara

Lamb dust everything off lightly in a powder blue tailored jacket with soft diagonal stitching. Mary Reimers skips out in a pink sports dress, trimmed with a sprinkling of gold stars on the belt. Spring! and still that bright green canvas hat waits expectantly in the Co-op for John Cavanaugh or Scarlett O'Hara.

HAIR STYLES SUGGESTED . . .

Bangs Are Feminine, So Are Pompadores

By BETTY JANE BIGGS

Wails of "what am I going to do with this fugitive from a hay stack," are heard from every sorority girls' dorm and co-op bull fest. Spring term is practically here with thoughts of the mill-race, picnics, swimming—and renovated coiffures.

Most campus queens vary their general hair styles very little, believing in simplicity. But the coeds, planning for their Easter bonnets, those little garden plot hats with a wisp of veiling, are going to build their hair up, pompadour fashion in front, letting it sweep in the back to shoulder-length in distinct rolls.

Less Pins

For the sportswoman who wants to use fewer bobby pins, try the new right-out-from-under-the-dryer soft and bubbly bangs.

New Gadgets Help To Banish Old Monotony

Here are some fashion hints:

Nylon Anklets—built for real wear these anklets have Nylon reinforcements at the heels and toes.

King Tut Gloves—of course, your shortie gloves are smart. King Tut thought so, too, when he wore his close to four thousand years ago.

Cuff Link Photos—fastening the front of a white corded shirt. Some of these cuff links and studs have tiny photographs.

Triangles—you may not like them with boy friends but you'll adore the cowhide leather bag shaped like a triangle.

Saddle-leather Belts and Buttons—a coppery fob-chain makes the belt different.

The University of Illinois school of journalism has added a course in radio broadcasting.

Because practically everybody wears a white collar peeking over the sweater top they now come to you with the white pique snapped to the shoulder seams. That's why it's called Whippersnapper.

You can't just TIE A RIBBON 'ROUND IT

It may look fetching on the new Spring hats, but it won't work to just tie a ribbon around your hair and expect it to be a real crowning glory. The new Spring hats demand new Spring coiffures—hair styles done by expert hands. Coeds know that Kramer's on-the-campus shop knows what to do with college girls' hair. They can get the styles they want at prices they want to pay.

Manicures, too, and all of those little freshening-up jobs that Spring calls for.
