

Luxuries and Things

By MARY ANN CAMPBELL

your glamorous moments, and Suede and Checkmate for every day, are four of Bendel's new perfumes. Checkmate has two lipsticks to match it, named Check and Doublecheck, made with the same scent. All these come in gold gift packages.

Not new, but still wonderful, is the huge box of cream of almond bath powder you can obtain for a mere pittance considering the huge amount you get. The cream of almond is as fresh and gentle to smell as its name implies, making you think of bright green grass and pink almond blossoms against a blue country sky.

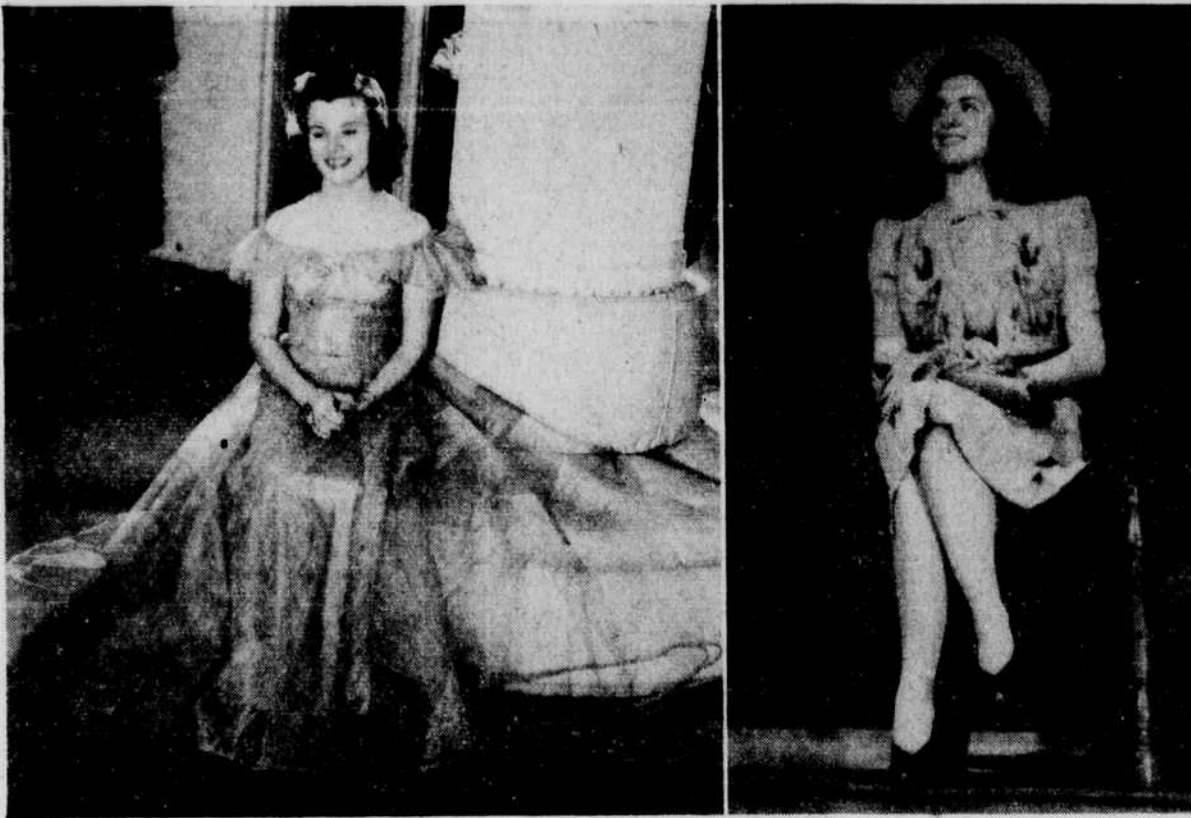

Chen Yu nail lacquer now puts out a little set of five bottles of the lacquer in assorted colors and a bottle of lacqueral. New colors, which have not yet been shipped out, or officially put on the market, will be east wind, an orange pink; brown coral, looking like its name, and mandarin red, a very dark, almost black shade, for dark dresses. These are not yet obtainable at local shops, but they are worth waiting for.

Tailsin, a recent product of Lelong's, is all you expect it to be. It positively makes you dizzy to smell it. You will find it in bath Bendel's house also puts out some bath accessories known as soap cloth discs, a charmingly unique idea. They are little round sponges that come 12 in a box and are colored pink and blue. In the water they unfold into cloths, with the soap already in them, a convenience for traveling.

Evening glamor is shown by Janet Straubel in a light blue silk marquisette with lace inserts and a lace bodice, which may be found at HADLEY'S. The Mexican motif so prevalent in 1941 spring clothes is in evidence here in a good "little" dress with a bolero, that has the cactus design applied on it. The dress, cactus and all, is at the BROADWAY.

Pif-paf-puf is the childish name for Lelong's very practical purse kits, containing summer shades in make-up. They contain all his regular line of cosmetics and come in the new colors to match your dress, beige, rose, light blue, and stripes.

The odorette sachet doll is an amiable and pleasant little girl who will dangle in your closet or lie in your drawer or even just make the room itself smell pretty, but she does her job of scenting whatever you want efficiently. She comes in carnation, gardenia or rose, as you wish.

If you haven't heard somebody raving about Elizabeth Arden's Woodhue by this time, you either are deaf or don't know the right people. It is one of her new perfumes, one of the most spicy and at the same time sweet ones imaginable. She also has just put out a torrid one called Tigress, heavy and languorous; light and witty Straw Hat, and Aphrodesia, dryly humorous.

Shoes Take Over New Color Fields

By JOEY CHRYSTALL

One of the new things about shoes this spring is the colors they come in. There is an impulse, when you have dress and hat and perhaps purse of a cool spinach green, to try to find some shoes of the same color. The chances are that this spring you will be able to find them. You can also find them in new off-blue shades, and in all the myriad variations of beige. Very smart looking are brown shoes trimmed with beige patent leather.

We've been reading something in the magazines about the latest shriek in the Southern resorts, and it seems that red shoes, particularly red alligator ones, are popular. They are worn with almost any color, with a result that there are many striking color combinations.

Another trend in shoes is the strong urge toward the primitive. Allowing you to walk with the lithe poise of the Indian maiden are some sandals fashioned after the huarches and moccasins of the early inhabitants of Americas. You can achieve almost a barefoot grave in these shoes whose supple leather follows every line of your foot. They are made very simply, with sometimes only a single strap between your first and second toes to hold them on.

Favorites which have proved themselves and are with us for another year are shoes with open toes. Besides knowing that one's feet are delightfully cool in these shoes, one has the feeling that they are not quite so plain looking as the older order. Another old favorite is the wedge heel. We heard a rather amusing comment by one young thing on this subject. "The only thing I don't like about them," she mused, as she stared adoringly at her trim feet "is that they make it awfully hard for me to hook my heel around the bar rail."

Hawaiian Styles For Spring Term

It won't be long until the Oregon tall firs go bon voyage to the islands of romance and beautiful women. Of course the boys will want to make an impression on some of those dark-haired wa-hinees. The proper attire for Hawaii could be used here at Oregon for spring term.

The tall firs should take white palm beach suits, and white dinner jackets. Light polo shirts of silk, rayon, or cotton are in style. Those white shoes that have been in the closet the past six months can be cleaned up.

As for swimming trunks, light-colored with Hawaiian prints are just about the thing for Waikiki. These are rather attractive at Oregon, too, for fellas.

Oregana Workers Enter Home Stretch

"All pictures have now been taken for the Oregana and all copy is in," Wilbur Bishop, Oregana editor, announced yesterday. The next 20 days will be occupied in pasting in pictures for the final dummy.

Proofs for the cover which will, according to the editor, even surpass last year's popular yearbook binding, have been turned in.

"All preliminary work should be completed before March 22 and the Oregana will appear before Junior week-end," Bishop stated.
