Far East Director
To Describe Jails
He has Attended

Jimmie Young, who speaks today at a student assembly, was, in addition to his many other posts in the Japanese capital, far eastern director of INS for 10 years.

Last year he was the first man from Tokyo to reach China's back-country headquarters of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek at Chungking.

He was back in Tokyo writing up his reports on what he had seen when the Japanese army arrested him and threw him into jail, accusing him of libel. For 61 days he froze in an unheated cell, his stay made bearable only by the loan of Ambassador Joseph Grew's sealskin overcoat. Nine independent Japanese committees voluntarily organized to help fight for his cause and it was with their aid that Ambassador Grew finally accomplished Young's release.

The Tokyo Rotary club, out of a total membership of 200, admitted five foreign members, and of this select five, Mr. Young was one for 10 years.
