Talk Scheduled By Von Brucke

Austrian Scholar Will Speak Twice Here Next Week

Ernst von Brucke, former professor of physiology at the University of Innsbruck, Austria, will speak here Tuesday, April 8, and Wednesday, April 9, announced Professor Rudolf H. Ernst, chairman of the University lecture series.

Dr. von Brucke left Austria in 1936, and has since been doing research work at Harvard medical school. His lecture Tuesday at 4 p.m. in 103 Deady, on "Fatigue and Recovery in the Peripheral Nerves," is under the sponsorship of Sigma Xi, science honorary, and will be of particular interest to psychology and physiology students.

The second lecture, to be given in the faculty room of Friendly hall Wednesday evening at 7:30 will concern a topic of more general interest: the problem of adjusting oneself to environment, and the adaptation of the individual personality. This lecture is the last in the University lecture series.

Professor von Brucke is making a tour of western states, and through the joint efforts of the University of Oregon and Oregon State college, has been scheduled to speak here. The lectures are free of charge to the general public and students.

Registration Total Increased to 3198

With the addition of 13 registrants Thursday University registration figures, previously having a two per cent decrease, now show a decrease of only one per cent, compared with same time last year.

Wednesday registrants raised total registration figures to 3198. This compares with 3244 registered at the same time last year.

Those wishing to register should should do so in Johnson hall. A late registration fee of $5 will be charged. April 5 is the deadline for registration.

Springtime in Vienna

Last spring Oregon was a stage of swirling pinafores, and Queen Betty III (Betty Buchanan) was a petite "first lady" during a weekend of Strauss waltzes that wafted one back to Vienna, the gaiety that prevailed there during springtime.

That's a review of Junior Weekend Queens, from 1931 to 1940. Who'll loll on sumptuous cushions this year as queen while people are whisked away on a magic carpet back into the tales of the "Arabian Nights?"

Program Shift Planned in Fall

New Pacific Basin Courses Outlined By Dr. H. J. Noble

A new undergraduate major curriculum in Pacific Basin studies cutting across departmental lines and administered by a faculty committee will be introduced at Oregon next fall.

The program, which has been in preparation for several years, has been approved by the state board of higher education. It will be established in the college of social science and will lead to master of arts or master of science degrees in this field.

Noble Chairman

Dr. H. J. Noble, associate professor of history, chairman of the committee in charge, says that the program will include works of several departments.

"In this way we are able to escape some of the restrictions of departmental work," he said. The departments to be included in the program are anthropology, history, geography, sociology, political science, and art.

Tried at U of M

Dr. Noble stated that the same system has been tried at the University of Michigan with considerable success.

"Because of its location and the interest of the state generally in Pacific rim affairs, this seems to be the logical type of work for the University to emphasize," he added.

Committee

The committee is made up of Associate Professor of History Harold J. Noble, chairman; Head of the Anthropology Department Luther J. Cressman; Professor of Business Administration Alfred L. Lomax; Associate Professor of Space Arts Nowland B. Zane; and Head of the Geography and Geology Departments Warren D.

They will arrange special lectures on Pacific affairs and also conferences on problems of eastern Asia.

Yesterday the man who walks the campus with nothing for company but a cane or an umbrella, celebrated his twentyfirst anniversary. Jack Cossman, for 21 years night watchman on the Oregon campus still walked around with his green umbrella last night; rattling windows, closing doors, and peering into

At Friendly hall, he stopped to reminisce, all the time with his eye on his watch.

"I haven't lost any time for ten years on my beat. I had to miss a little time before that when my wife was ill.

"Among the things that I remember best are the time the professor took the armchairs out of the architecture building to put them in his fraternity house, and the fire that almost burned up the whole journalism department in 1924."

The professor was taken care of, but the fire spread, according to Jack.

"I was walking along looking up, when suddenly I saw smoke coming out of the cupola of a building; then the fire really started and the sparks spread clear to the athletic field.

"People got so excited that they did everything. They'd throw a mirror out the window and then walked downstairs to bring things that could have been thrown out the window. They threw the journalism press out the window, too."

Jack used to be a blacksmith in Creswell, Oregon, before he came to take his night watchman job here. When he came to Oregon, he had two sons going to school here; one very outstanding in football and the other shining in grades.

One winter Jack had to walk around the campus with gunny sacks wrapped on each foot through the deep snow.

"I've never run from anything," he said. "I've never been scared of anything either."

When Jack was asked if he wouldn't like a birthday cake from the Emerald staff to celebrate his 21st anniversary, he said, "Sure I would, if you'd like to give me one."

But he'd probably see the candles in the window and think someone was breaking in.

Sophs to Grow Chin-Stubble For Beard Hop

'Law' to Chastise Shaved Offenders Beginning Monday

Bearded men of the class of '43 will follow a razor-less path for the next two and a half weeks preparatory to their annual Whiskerino dance, April 19, Bud Vandenynde, sophomore president, announced last night.

The shaving ban started Wednesday and offenders who refuse to let nature take its course and let their beards grow, will be punished by "law" starting Monday. At that time Sheriff Homer Thomas and a staff of deputies covering every corner of the campus will open a campaign of dunking and hacking that will last until dance night.

Ceremonies following penal. convictions will take place in front of the Side each afternoon, Vandenynde revealed.
