

Soph Whiskerino Dance Tickets Go on Sale Today

Gerlinger Hall Space Limitations Hold Ducats to 450

A limited block of Soph Whiskerino dance tickets officially go on sale this morning in McArthur court, Co-Chairmen Bill Edlefsen and Ray Packouz revealed last night as they announced the final schedule in dance plans.

Limited space of Gerlinger hall and desire to give each couple a fair dancing chance has forced cutting total admissions to 450 couples, the two heads revealed.

Prices for the annual Soph Whisker dance will be $1.25. Tickets will also be placed on sale in each living organization through individual salesmen, and when the printed supply is gone, all selling will stop, Edlefsen said.

Morgan Coming

Russ Morgan, the man who made famous the theme song, "Does Your Heart Beat for Me?" will play for the dance, bringing a complete orchestra including Songstress Phyllis Lynne.

The dance will carry out in full decoration a modern version of the Paul Bunyan theme, according to Packouz and Edlefsen. This will include life-size illustrations of the famous woodsman and his blue ox, "Babe."

What, No Honor Role? He Waited for Oregon Movie to Show Art Methods

The fact that he didn't make the honor roll while attending Jefferson high school in Portland didn't stop Orville Marcellus from cracking out with a cumulative 3.87 GPA his first two terms here this year as a freshman.

For this feat he was awarded the Beta Gamma Sigma award of "Freshman of the Year" among business administration majors.

After working a year and a half after high school graduation the "honor" man found his true love in commercial courses while "p. g'ing" at Jefferson. He came to Oregon on his own money to pursue that love.

It's not all studying for Marcellus, however, for he gets up at 6 o'clock every morning so that he may put in his three and a half hours a day at the infirmary, serving patients and working in the kitchen.

Although modest and retiring, he was not ashamed to admit that one more hour's study might have netted him a 4-point last term. Spring fever "got" him during the last weeks of winter term and he took a "B" in a one-hour course.

He is far from through with his accounting course in which he will major. He is certain that he will never do as well in grades again.

As for leisure time activities, he likes a brisk game of badminton, likes to dance when he has time, and isn't interested in books.

Part of his scholastic success may lie in the fact that he plans his work ahead, trying during the weekend, for example, to do his entire accounting for the week. Coupled with this is the fact that he is going to school on his own money and figures it the business-like thing to do to get as much as he can for it.

New York university's college of engineering will offer a new course in research laboratory management.

Film Will Illustrate Adams' Procedure In Portrait Painting

An unusual full-color motion picture of Wayman Adams, American portrait painter, painting a demonstration portrait of Morris Gest, noted theatrical producer, will be shown in the lecture room at the University art school, Friday, April 18.

Sponsored by the architecture and allied arts school, this full-length film, the first of its kind, is scheduled for three showings on Friday at 3 p.m., 4 p.m., and 7:30 p.m. Admission is free.

According to Who's Who in America, Mr. Adams is one of the foremost portrait painters in the United States. He studied at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, Paris, under Jean Paul Laurens.

As war artist in the first world war, he painted at the front portraits of 143 officers of the AEF, including General John J. Pershing and staff, many soldiers who had been cited for heroism in action, and several officers of the allies, including Marshal Foch.

Doughnuts and Sophs Find Lot in Common

By RAY SCHRICK

Male members of the sophomore class had a barrel of fun yesterday—figuratively speaking.

The more appropriate expression would be to say that they had a half hour of dunking and splashing as "punishment" to offenders who refuse to "let the beards grow."

Crowds collected in a wide circle from far and wide as the "offenders" came to take their medicine and bear up under the chilling breezes.

Bill Edlefsen, co-chairman of the Whiskerino, and violator of the no-shave rule appeared, "hobbed" twice for a potato in the bottom of the dunking barrel. Upon being released the third time, he promptly entered protests of "sabotage," and threw open the job of sheriff to any fair-minded newcomer.

The man of the hour, law-enforcing agent, Homer Thomas, took comers and wise cracks alike quietly as he supervised his two "he-man" assistants, Dick Ashcom and Floyd Rhea in seeing that justice be administered.

Promptly at 12:50 p.m. quiet reigned on the Side front to signify the end of the afternoon's dunking activities. Next performance, according to Sheriff Thomas, will be Thursday afternoon.

Dr. Walker, who received his Ph.D. at University of Chicago, will speak on the philosophy of religion in the liberal arts and sciences. The lecture is open to students and faculty, and is under the sponsorship of the University lecture series.

Conflict Retarding Election Progress

Conflicts in provisions of class constitutions regarding election boards are retarding progress in the formation of an election board for class and ASUO elections May 8, John Cavanagh, director of elections, revealed Tuesday.

By action of class presidents, it was decided to hold all elections on the same day, but each class constitution provides differently for an election board, Cavanagh explained.

The central election board, when appointed, will determine the polling places and look after other details of the election.
