

Movie to Show Balkan Folk Art

Europe Traveler To Bring Pictures From Los Angeles

A moving picture showing the folk art of the Balkan countries will be shown to University students and Eugene townspeople Wednesday at 10 a. m. in Villard hall.

Sponsored by the architecture and allied art schools, this picture is being brought to Oregon by Mrs. Nelbert Chouinard, head of the Chouinard art school in Los Angeles.

All phases of the unusual folk states will be shown in the movie, and Mrs. Chouinard will make comments as the picture runs.

Mrs. Chouinard recently returned to the United States from central Europe, where she was detained for many months because of the war.

Plans were made for future meetings on special subjects, which will include the following speakers and topics: Mrs. C. B. Beall, on Mexican art; A. R. Vargas, instructor in Romance languages, on Columbian culture; and L. P. Artau, assistant professor of music, on Spanish music.

Representatives of various schools of social work will be in attendance at the annual conference of the Oregon State Conference of Social Work April 30 through May 3.

Headquarters will be at the Portland hotel in Portland. Education, sociology, psychology, and other students majoring in these or related subjects who are interested in discussing graduate work in the social or health welfare fields are invited to attend the conference.

YW Groups Discuss Realism in Living

"Realism in Christian Living" will be the topic under discussion this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the YWCA bungalow.

Co-chairmen for the discussion group are Elizabeth Edmunds and Bob Sabin. Anyone interested is invited to attend.

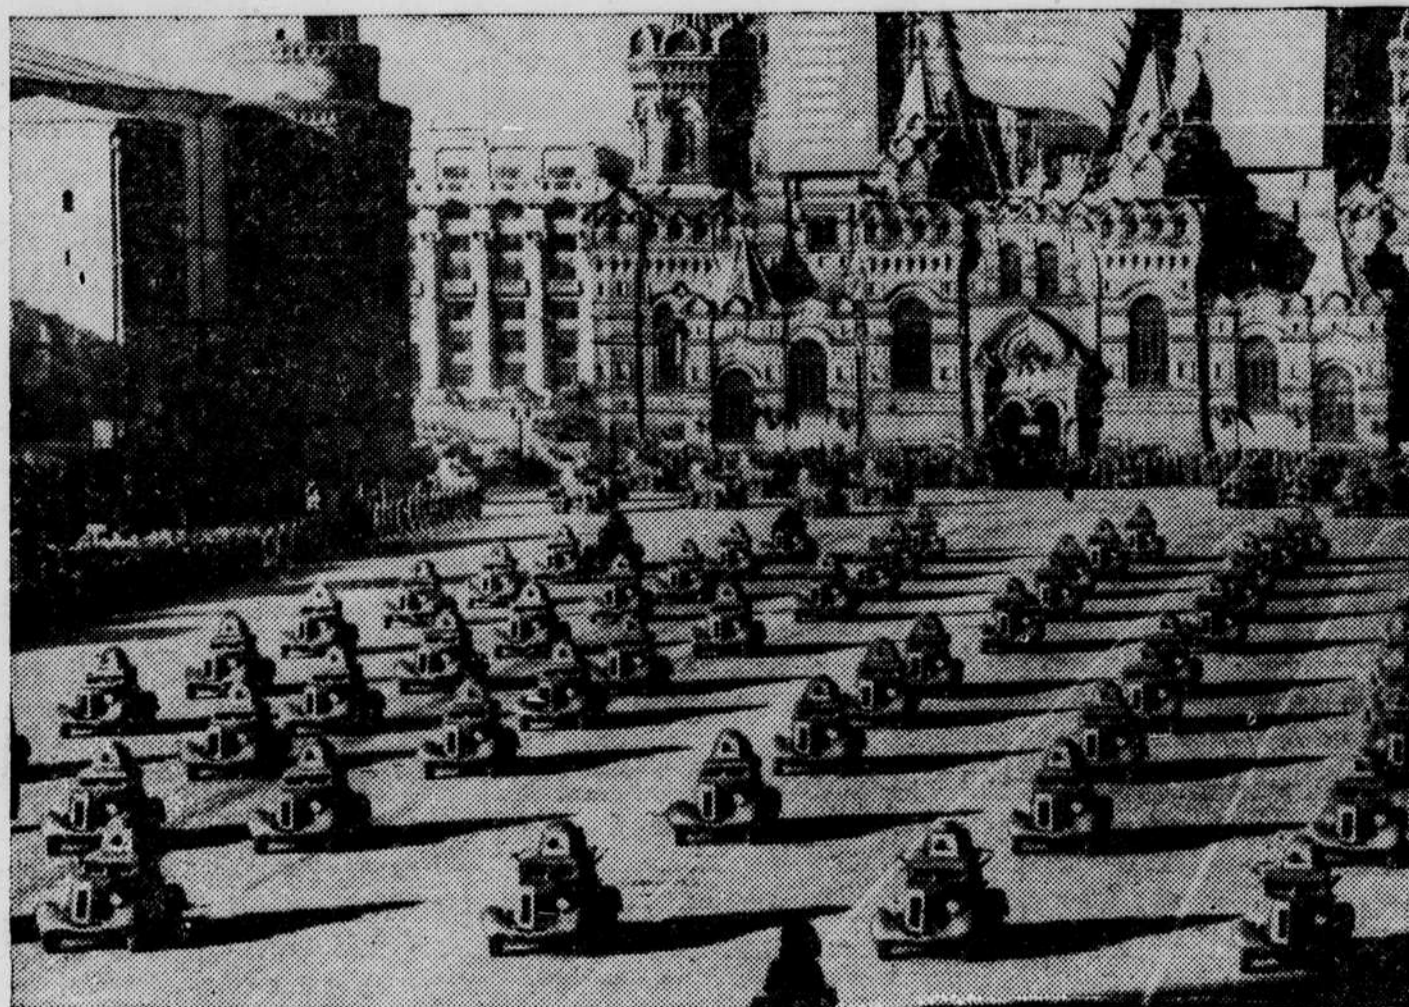

Speakers on the program will be Margaret DeCou, Bob Sabin, Jeanette Eddy, and Jack Morris.

This is the second in a series of discussion groups given each Wednesday. Topics chosen are those which will be considered at Seabeck, college conference camp, this summer.

SOVIET LEGIONS PARADE, WAIT

Russian armored cars form an impressive pattern of steel as they parade in Moscow during an anniversary celebration of the Octobrist revolution. In a recent broadcast, Josef Stalin declared, "Soviet Russia is ready for every eventuality and for this purpose is in a state of total mobilization."

Fact-Finders

struction of the building near Deady and Villard would present an architectural problem in that it would be necessary to match the architecture of the new building with that of the two old buildings. Necessity of cutting down many of the trees now in that section of the campus was also mentioned.

Furthermore, Dr. Norris observed, construction of the building here would create an obstruction in the mall between the library and the Dads' gates.

Possibilities of a site on the millrace were mentioned, but Dr. Norris said that further details for construction here were lacking since the idea of construction on the race was relatively new.

In relation to this site committee members mentioned relocation of the Southern Pacific railroad tracks and moving of the highway. These changes would make possible a building on the race, they declared, but said they were unable to present a definite program until plans of the highway commission and the Southern Pacific had been made known.

Lounge, Eat, Play

Furnishings for the building were discussed generally with main discussion centering around lounges, banquet rooms, and game rooms.

The idea of a "music room" where students could play phonograph records was brought up and the majority of persons at the meeting seemed to favor an arrangement of this sort. Such a room, speakers said, would supplement the service in the music school's "Carnegie room," which was called "inadequate."

J. O. Lindstrom, University business manager, spoke briefly on financial plans for the building. The 1941 legislature, he said, passed an enabling bill, which would allow the University to raise money for the building, but it did not appropriate the funds for it.

Comes the Pay-off

It would then, he said, be necessary to borrow necessary funds. This would be done, presumably, by bond issuance. Paying off the bonds, which would understandably mature in 25 years, could be accomplished by revenue from student activities, rentals from the University Co-op store, rentals from leased space, and building fees not previously pledged, he said.

At present, he explained, there is $40,000 in the student union fund. Only $12,000 of this is in cash, however. Another $15,000 is loaned to the Associated Students, and $13,000 is invested in real estate.

Persons at the meeting discussed the advisability of taking student polls to determine a cross-section of student opinion regarding student union. Dr. Norris declared that he wanted to "prevent too quick crystalization of opinion before we can get all the facts."

Prefer 'Regulars'

In response to a question, Dr. Norris said that campus organizations will be allowed to help furnish various rooms of the building. He declared, however, that the committee wishes to avoid definite assignment of rooms to particular groups unless these groups plan "seven-day use" of the building.

Faculty members of the committee are: Dr. Norris, Mr. Lindstrom, Virgil D. Earl, dean of men; Fred Cuthbert, associate professor of landscape architecture; and C. L. Kelly, professor of business administration.

Student members are: Ray Schrick, Mary Elizabeth Earl, Uly Dorais, Bob Lovell, and Tiger Payne, ex-officio member.

June Old Oregon To Carry Article By J. MacGregor

The June issue of Old Oregon, alumni magazine, will carry an article by John Murdock MacGregor, '23, official bellringer for the University of Oregon alumni in New York. The article tells the complete history of the student union building, "For Ultimate Good of the University."

Starting the movement for the student union building in 1922, MacGregor was president of the student body. He is now a very prominent attorney in New York, and one of the officers in the national interfraternity council.

Keeping in close contact with Oregon in all ways possible, MacGregor taught admiralty law at Oregon's summer session last year. He entertains members of the basketball team whenever they go to New York.

Dr. Morris to Help Install Merit System

Dean Victor P. Morris of the school of business administration is one of three Oregon residents on a recently-established merit system council set up in connection with the federal social security program to work with the public welfare commission in Oregon.

The council's first meeting will be in Portland Friday. It convenes in conjunction with the meeting of the Oregon public welfare commission. Its first duty will be to select a superintendent for initial work on the system of selection and promotion of the entire personnel of the welfare commission.
