

Guild Theater To Offer New Broadway Hit

University Group Will Close Season With Fresh Comedy

One of the freshest comedies to come this current season from the mecca of the theater, Broadway, is the new Kaufman-Hart show, "George Washington Slept Here," shortly to be shown at the University theater.

The father of our country enters into the play only in a legendary sense, however, for the Fuller family acquire their "place in the country" for the sole reason that the first American president one night adorned a bed there.

No Time

The Fuller's attempt a renovation of their home and celebrate by having some young people down for a real weekend. Playing hostess is Madge, the fair young thing of the family, who can't give much time to her guests as she has decided (temporarily, of course) to do some running around with an Errol Flynn type of actor.

Perhaps the most humorous of the weekenders is Marion Wilcox, a lush blonde, who smiles sweetly at one and all, but never gets around to saying a word during her entire visit.

A laugh-packed scene occurs when the young people have all made plans to enjoy "life in the country" by swimming. All dressed for the occasion, a thunderstorm comes up to keep them indoors. They pass the time sitting around listening to a visiting rich uncle snore loudly, afraid

Invalids Include Numerous Stars As Yet Unknown

We'll now have five seconds of silence for those poor invalids at the campus pill palace. The weather . . . scrumptuous for picnics. (Ain't you jealous?). About the only signs of life yesterday were the plaintive strains of Benny Goodman's "Sent For You Yesterday . . . but still am stuck here today, etc."

There is certainly an assembly of feminine pulchritude . . . (two-bit word if I ever saw one). Among the glammer gals there is Maggie Barrett, Ruth (de shrmp) Hartley, Otilia Hofstetter, Jerry Rotegard, Jean Hoover, and Loreta Smith.

Goldwyn has been looking for men like these: Jim Kurtz, Bob Brokow, Tom (the terror) Oxman, Orville Marcellus, Paul Livesay, Bob Lovell, Redmond Rudolph, and Jim (Adonis) Durkeheimer.

Canterbury Group Elects New Officers

Officers of the Canterbury club, Episcopal student group, were elected recently. Huntington Young is president, Marian Clark, vice-president, and Lorraine Long, secretary-treasurer.

Art Pulos, of the art school, will discuss music and its effect on children this Sunday at 6 p.m.

to talk because it might wake the "old codger," and unable to get the Sunday papers because he is sitting on them.

"George Washington Slept Here" is just a succession of such comic situations. George F. Smith, assistant director, announces that it will be presented sometime in May. It is the last University theater production for this school year.

Med Students Must Register

Air Class Calls For Enrollees

J. C. Stovall Asks Interested Students To Contact Fenton

The possibility of a summer civil pilot training program, coupled with the necessity for formulating a list of the students who will be included in next fall's CPT "flying fifty" prompts the CPT office to call for immediate applications, according to J. C. Stovall, assistant director of the program.

All students who desire to take the flying course at some future date are urged to go to the Fenton hall office where full particulars as to physical and hours requirements will be given. The office is open every afternoon and Saturday mornings.

As a secondary announcement, pertaining to those students who have already applied, Mr. Stovall, requests that they visit the office within the next few days to check over their application, as to summer address, change of address, etc.

Mr. Stovall stressed the point that many positions and careers in the field of aeronautics were open to young men of today and that the primary CPT course provides a good basic flying background.
