To the Editor:

Thursday's all student body elections, the largest ever held on the campus, were invalidated after Tiger Payne turned in a petition to the judiciary committee protesting some technicality.

Tiger Payne is president of the student body. It is his duty to see that the machinery for the elections is properly set up and properly run off. If he knew that something was wrong within the election it was his duty and responsibility to see that the wrong was corrected before the election, instead of throwing the ballots out of the window.

How about it?

An Exhibition Of Paintings

from the famous Solomon R. Guggenheim collection will be held over in the little art gallery of the University art building until after May 11, as an added feature in the Junior Weekend program. There is no charge for admission.

This group, originally shown in New York City, contains rare pieces by Vasily Kandinsky and Rudolf Bauer, recognized by authorities as the two greatest names in modern non-objective art.

Found Russian Academy

Kandinsky, the original creator of lyrical non-objective painting, founded the Russian Academy of Arts and Sciences. He was born in Moscow, but now lives in Paris.

Acclaimed as the outstanding master of modern non-objective painting, Rudolf Bauer is the creator of the more dramatic type of non-objective art. Born in Lindenwald, Poland, Bauer was an early student of Kandinsky's.

Stresses Design

According to authorities of the Guggenheim Foundation, New York, these new schools of painting have arisen to "reaffirm the essential value of design to aesthetic expression," and to protest against the tendency since the Renaissance toward extreme naturalism.

Baroness Hilla Rebay, director of the Guggenheim non-objective collection, writes, "the non-objective picture stands by itself as an intensely free creation, conceived out of the intuitive feeling of space and the vital joy in the rhythmic essence of balance."

Both the lyric and the epic schools of non-objective art are represented in the exhibit now showing at the University Art School.

W. F. G. Thacher Will Speak on an Advertising Panel at the Pacific Advertising Clubs association's annual convention in Santa Barbara, June 29 to July 3.

way through college—but very few accomplish this feat by magic.

Bill Bishop, freshman in journalism, is a bona fide professional magician, and at the pre-Junior Weekend rally last night he "strutted his stuff."

He will again be featured during intermission of the Canoe Fete Saturday night.

Started as Hobby

"I started doing magic just like other fellows do photography, or some other hobby," explained Bill. "I've done pretty good at it, too. I've made over $100 since school started."

"When did I start doing magic? Oh, about 11 years ago. I did my first professional act at 15," he confided.

Varied Experience

Bill has done shows for many clubs and organizations throughout the state. A large, leather-bound scrap-book contains letters of recommendation and appreciation from many of these organizations.

The general subject for discussion will be "Advancement of Business and Advertising." Professor Thacher originated the first education department convention ever held in the P.A.C.A. some years ago.

President of the P.A.C.A. is Don Belding, who is vice-president of Lord and Thomas, advertising agency. Mr. Belding is an Oregon graduate, and father of Don Belding Jr., University freshman.

Mothers' Church Services Will Be held in nearly all Eugene churches Sunday morning, it was announced yesterday by Junior Weekend chairmen.

A part of the weekend program, the Eugene churches were understood to be cooperating with University activity men to best entertain the mothers of University students while they are in Eugene.

The majority of the services will be held at 11 a.m., and dinner will follow in most living organizations at 1 p.m.

Ballots Cast In Elections

Thursday are now ashes.

They were never counted. Ballot boxes remained locked until Law School Dean Wayne L. Morse, chairman of the judiciary committee, opened them and threw the ballots into the fireplace in his office in Fenton hall.

This was in accordance with instructions from the judiciary committee, which provided that the ballots would be seized and placed in a safe place until such time as they could be delivered to the office of the chairman of the committee, where in due course of time and without any counting of said ballots, they would be destroyed by burning."

Senior Class Officers for next year were announced last night by Lou Torgeson, president of the Class of '42. They are:

Bob Cherney, president; Pat Lawson, vice-president; Dorothy Jean Johnson, secretary; and Mack Hand, treasurer.

Because only one set of candidates was nominated at class nominations May 1, election formalities were dispensed with, Torgeson said. He explained that the class had been advised to declare the candidates "automatically elected" because of the expense of an election. The class had approved.
