

Legal Brains Prepare Briefs Against Sophs

A "hair-raising" argument between the sophomores and the law school student body is expected Tuesday afternoon when officials of these two organizations meet to decide whether the law school is infringing upon the sophomore's Whiskerino by holding what they have decided to call the Law School Whiskerino on November 1 the same evening as the former.

A whisker contest to determine the most heavily bearded woman among the dates of the lawyers is to be the main feature of the law school dance.

Briefs Prepared

The best legal minds on the campus are preparing briefs on the case with the advantage naturally on the side of the would-be lawyers. The counsel for the barrister boys cites the recently decided case of Joseph V. Dunbar, in which the decision stated that phrases such as "drive it yourself" were not subject to trade-mark or protection on the grounds of unfair competition.

The lawyers also contend that their purpose, object, and intentions are of an entirely different nature and hence not in conflict with the sophomore affair.

They base this opinion on the fact that their whiskerino contest is limited strictly to the coeds attending the law school dance, which is itself limited to members of the law school and their dates.

MR. AND MRS. NEWT SMITH
SIDE PATTERN
Pat Taylor

Things were really spronging in Portland last weekend. . . . If it weren't so corny, we'd be tempted to say rally rally. . . . Robin Nelson threw a party and no one came . . . on'y about a hundred. . . . Jantzen wasn't very crowded, everyone had his square inch. . . . Stanley Kenton was nothing but smooth . . . and everyone looked real hivey. . . . Incidentally, it was a (four-letter word) fine game, a bit wet, which made all the girls' minks stink; but it was a good game, stinking minks and all. . . . Paul McCarty, Sigma Nu, has one of this season's more gruesome crew cuts. . . . Lovey-dovey stuff: Suzanne Stickels, Chi O, comes home with Bob Devereaux' Theta Chi pin . . . while things aren't so spooony any more with Lora-belle Wraith and John Schaeffers, her having given him him pin. . . . New routine: Gorgeous Gurdy Hoy's way of saying, "Would you like to be a first? We already have a 2nd, 3rd, and fourth." . . . Good psychology, that. . . . We've never been one to mince words, but to mince pies . . . Ah! to the Side for mince pies. . . . As T. Dorsey would put it: Yes, indeed! . . . See you on the late shift.

Rain Victims Hit Infirmary

"I went to the game," was the pass word to the antechambers of the Pill Palace Tuesday; no symptomatic descriptions were necessary.

Infirmary pulse indicated that Duck game goers didn't gambol home so gaily and that many came back slightly unstarched. However, nurses expressed the opinion that an injection of new periodicals along the benches might relieve the general apathy.

Hospital gate receipts brought the total to 17, which includes: Margaret Deane, Grace Henry, Lorraine Kopa, Robin Nelson, June Cummings, Allen Foster, Fred Lloyd, Fred Treadgold, Bill Maltman, Ralph Odell, John Hediger, Richard Draper, Arnold Larsen, Ed Nulty, Berkeley Snow, Harry Prongas, Richard Rule.

U.S. Engineer Makes Survey

A survey to determine the effect of dams on the fish industry of the Willamette river is being conducted by Lawrence D. Townsend, assistant biologist of the United States engineering department, using the laboratory facilities of the University science department.

The first extensive study of Pacific salmon migratory problems in relation to dam construction in the Willamette valley area, this survey will decide the best procedure for complete protection of the fish. It will provide data for designing protection of the fish while dams are still in the blue print stage rather than waiting until construction is completed before studying the problem.

Fern Ridge and Cottage Grove dams do not come under the study, Townsend said, because they do not present migratory fish problems.

Extension Department Broadens Curriculum

In view of the increasing demand for correspondence courses for home study, the general extension division has prepared a number of new courses designed to cover a field aiding everyone from the office worker to the person interested in farming.

Planned to interest students are several courses in mathematics, one, a four-hour college credit course in the elements of algebra which can be used either for review or to obtain the fundamentals of algebra; another in trigonometry which would be of particular value to anyone interested in the preparatory courses for aviation or naval service.

Credits Offered

The first term of 18th century English novel is being planned and can be used by students majoring in English to meet the requirements in novel work.

Engineering drawing, a course somewhat similar to mechanical drawing but more specifically of value to an engineering student, will soon be offered to the public.

Farm accounting, office management, and first year stenography are being planned for correspondence work and are comparable to class work given on the campus.

Hygiene Added

Housewives interested in learning more about giving their families good care will welcome the work offered in physiology which has a specific emphasis on the elements of hygiene.

Home gardening enthusiasts will find a course for them, too, in landscape architecture which has been prepared to develop enjoyment in gardening work. This may be used by students as an elective course, but it is not available for major credit in architecture.

The Gainsborough portrait of Lord Jeffery Amherst has recently been presented to Amherst college.
