

Men's Styles Drift to Slacks, Longer Jackets

By JOHN MATHEWS

The Webfoot male is as set on his dressing habits as if he wore plumage. Campus cords, sweater, and saddle shoes have become an unquestioned daytime uniform with which more than a little tampering is likely to provoke unfavorable comment.

For after dark the specifications are relaxed enough so that the man who is up on his toes can display individual apparel taste and still remain fairly within the code of conservatism that governs campus garb.

Styles Change

Though the style currents of Oregon move almost imperceptibly, the alert may detect a slight drift. Grab your magnifying glass, Watson, and let's have a look.

As everywhere, sports jackets are longer. They have come down to 31 inches in the latest models and are very smart without being reminiscent of Hollywood and Vine. Their partners in the perennial odd-jacket-and-contrasting-slack combination show a trend toward flannel, particularly in grays and browns. The coats themselves are as a rule the most refreshing part of the ensemble by virtue of the cheerful way in which they carry the color burden.

Despite the Atlantic war, Shetlands continue to enjoy a marked popularity, though the price-conscious Oregon campus leans heavily on tweeds and to a lesser degree, herringbones.

The material doing the most remarkable comeback this season, though never completely out, is flannel. Suits in both single-breasted and double-breasted models reveal ideal adaptability to the fashion for extreme drape, the emphasis falling on gray and blue-gray. Those who rely on a "basic wardrobe"—three suits with interchangeable coats and slacks—to answer their clothing needs with a minimum of expense seem to favor the team of flannel, covers, and tweed.

A word about vests. Except on dress or "dark blue" occasions, this item is about as common with Oregon men as skirts in the London club. Solid color sleeveless sweaters appear to have almost completely supplanted an old and respected article of male attire so far as this campus is concerned. The pullover version adds a little neatness, and seems to be gaining popularity. Along this line the happiest note is struck by the California lad, and one or two rivals for sartorial honors, who sports a beautifully contrasting waistcoat with matching coat and trousers. The job we noticed was a soft yellow doeskin with notched lapels. Yum, yum.

Last, show us the Webfoot male who doesn't think a well-kept head of hair is a better hat than any hundred and fifty dollar Stetson and we'll show you a bald man.

one's ears. Instantly, the soda-fountain boys, the waitresses and gathering students stood up, reverently and quietly. "Smokey," the Phi Delt mascot, stopped his aimless wandering from booth to booth as the gathering rose to their feet.

Kiddingly-disturbed Alpha Phis at lunch began to joke with one another about what they would do. Some said: "We'll be in the ambulance corps," "I'd rather do some knitting," "I'd like to be a nurse!" However, to Emerald readers must remain secret further ambitions.

Well, to say the least, this sort of trivia is more feeble than usual, Things Being How They Are. . . . The general opinion on the part of the fellows seems to be, quote Don Swink, "I'm gonna go out and indulge in some riotous living" . . . We've never been too smart, but even yet we find the fact that we're at war doesn't sink in. . . .

Well, back to guff, which is more our speed. . . . Bonny Bonnie Uhl's yule giftie will be a convoidible Plymouth, which should make it tough getting from the Alpha Phi house to the campus . . . roughing it, as it were. . . . Been meaning to say for some time that Ted Hallock's column is aces . . . but clever . . . but brainy . . . (that's that new "but" stuff; offspring of "but def'n'ly") . . . And here is where we say a word for the C. Side's fried chickie . . . but toothsome. . . . We think that Frank Watson, Phi Delt transfer from OAC, is good looking as all git out . . . what's more, he's plain oldfashioned nice . . .

So, gentle reader, we will close this term's patter with a jangle . . . from Mr. and Mrs. Newt, and all them as works at the Side . . . yes, an' me too.

Jangle:
Tho' GPA prospects may be scarey . . .
Here's wishing you students an Xmas . . . but Merry!
And also to you a mos' Happies' New Year,
When you get bock, come on down for a . . .
Fresh lemon coke.
See you on the shift . . . but late.
