

Student Drive Opens Soon; Tag Sale Set

The sound-off gun in the annual World Student Service fund drive at Oregon was sounded Thursday, when co-chairmen of the drive, Bud Vandeneynde and Elizabeth Edmonds, appointed the chairmen of the various committees which will put the drive over. At the same time H. R. Edwin Espy, secretary of the student volunteer movement, was selected as speaker for an all-campus assembly in connection with the drive.

The World Student Service fund is organized to aid destitute students in foreign lands and, this year, students who have been evacuated from invaded countries and are now living in the United States. The drive will begin Monday, January 26, and continue through Tuesday, February 3. The goal will be the collection of $400.

Mr. Espy's work as secretary entailed the enlistment of students for missionary work in foreign lands. He has spent many years in Geneva, Switzerland.

Named as committee heads for the drive are Jean Fridgeer, executive secretary; Ray Packouz, treasurer; John Busterud, education and speaker; Edith Onthank, posters; Bill Moshofsky, student speakers; Anita Simon, faculty solicitation; Og Young, student tag sale; Gerald Huestis, booth and independent student sale; Leslie Brockelbank, Katherine Korn, city school sale; Jane Warlick, sale to religious groups; and Janet Farnham, special projects.

The tag sale in connection with the drive will last from January 27 to 29. Mr. Espy will speak at the regular Thursday assembly time January 29.

Arts League Dance

A dance sponsored by the Architecture and Allied Arts league will be held in the Little Art gallery of the art building this afternoon from 3 to 5, according to Woody Ichihashi, president of the league.

All art students are invited to the affair, and no admission will be charged.

SHADES OF BOBBY BURNS

The curtain on the John Steinbeck play "Of Mice and Men" will be raised this evening when the University theater presents the first production of winter term. Taking part in the play are Bob Stedman (right) as Lennie, Ramona Roberts (center) as Curley's wife, and Bob Farrow as Slim.

The Way We Live . . . Moving Human Drama Crosses Stage Tonight

Tonight at 8 o'clock the University theater curtain rises on one of the most moving and uplifting dramatizations of human friendship, sacrifice, and poverty ever written, John Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men." Performances will continue Saturday and Tuesday, January 20.

Presented as a memorial to Alice Hult, a student here during 1934-36 who was a member of the first "Of Mice and Men" cast, the play features extremely realistic stage settings designed by its director, Horace W. Robinson.

The main set is that of the interior of a barn. This set has been built with as close an approach to actual conditions as is possible on the stage, with real bunks, straw, harness and coal-oil lamps.

Army Reprieve

Parker McNeil plays the role of Candy thanks to a 10-day extension on a call to the army air corps. Because of his part in the production, he was granted an extension before going into active duty at Bakersfield, California. This is the last time University audiences will see McNeil, who has taken part in a long succession of plays, among them "To-varich," "Taming of the Shrew,"

"Berkeley Square."

The part of George will be taken by Jerry Lakefish, who will have a chance to speak lines which amount to rough-shod poetry. Lennie, whose character has qualities of greatness in spite of the fact that his mind is child-like, will be played by Robert Stedman.

Frustration

Slim, the aristocrat of the hands and honored by them, will be played by Bob Farrow. Candy, symbol of the frustration, the pathetic helplessness of his environment, will be taken by Parker McNeil. David Zilka, the cruel braggart, and Ramona Roberts is Curley's wife, the victim of his jealousy and bullying.

Carlson, obtuse and self-centered, is Jim Bronson. Adrian Martin will become temporarily the hump-backed, lonely stable buck.

Especially good seats are available for tonight. Tickets may be obtained at the University theatre box office or by calling 3300, local 216.

Open House Set

The Plymouth club will hold an open house after the basketball game tonight in the Youth building in the rear of the Congregational church.

Ticket Deadline Set

Deadline for ticket sales to the motion picture "One Foot in Heaven" sponsored by the University YMCA is Saturday noon, Dan Bacot, executive secretary, stated yesterday. All money and tickets not sold are to be in by that time.

"I want to urge students to get their tickets from the 'Y' before Saturday," Bacot said, "because the YMCA will not get its 25 per cent from tickets sold at the McDonald."
