

Enforcement Of Blackouts Imperative

Since blackout restrictions went into effect on the University campus there have been 36 violations of regulations on which it was necessary to send letters to the offenders cautioning them about lights left on in campus buildings, according to Dr. Will V. Norris, professor of physics and head of the utilities division of the University defense council.

Under strict orders from the second interceptor command, it is necessary that all lights be turned out in 60 seconds in event of an air raid alarm.

Sets Responsibility

"The responsibility for this," wrote Dr. Norris in his "warning" letters, "lies in the individual who turns the lights on. It is the policy of the University to allow adequate lights when necessary, but the administration feels that it is our patriotic duty to abide by the letter and spirit of the regulations indicated."

Those buildings where blackout regulations have been repeated most are commerce, Friendly, and art and architecture. Janitors of the buildings have been instructed to report to Dr. Norris whenever lights are found on.

"If this situation is not corrected, lights will be turned out when the janitor leaves," declared Dr. Norris Tuesday, "and will not be turned on again until morning."

The defense head pointed out that in an actual air raid all lights on the campus could be turned out by pulling the master switch, but also that if this were done it could cause a great deal of unnecessary trouble. For instance, elevators, as in the library, would stop; laboratory equipment and refrigeration facilities would be without power; and the heating plant would have to shut down.

Reports of blackout violations, when received by Dr. Norris from the building janitors, are turned over to Robert C. Hall, chairman of the assistant air raid wardens, who in turn instructs the air raid wardens in the district where the violation occurs. This gives the assistant wardens an idea of where to expect trouble, if any, during an air raid.

German Movie To Show Today

"The Last Laugh," a German-produced film of the post-war era, will be the second of the winter term series of films sponsored by the educational activities board. Showings will begin at 2:30 in 207 Chapman and continue throughout the day.

Since the film is rather long, it is expected that showing will need to be continued until nearly closing hours. Admission is by educational activities card.

Filed in 1924, the picture contains several radical departures from the established films technique of the day. In several scenes the camera follows the action, eliminating the necessity for much of the splicing and editing that was necessary on other films of the time.

Powerful in its creation of emotional tension, "The Last Laugh" achieves a profound tenderness in the first meeting between Jannings and George John. The original conception, daring in the extreme in 1924, was carried off with rare success.

Dean Morse Decides Crown Mills Dispute

Wayne L. Morse, dean of the law school, decided today that the Crown mills of Portland was bound to grant either vacation with pay or the equivalent in a lump sum payment to employees who were not granted a vacation prior to September, 1941.

The decision was handed down in the arbitration case of the Crown mills and the Flour and Cereal Workers union on the interpretation of a vacation clause in their labor contract. The decision denied the claim of the union that the vacation pay should be on the basis of new wage rates provided for in a new wage agreement under the date of September 8, 1941.

Means Plans Vespers For Entire University

A University vespers service for all students is being planned for February 1 at the music auditorium, it was announced yesterday by Dr. Paul B. Means, professor of religion. The service will be sponsored by the voluntary religious organizations on the campus as well as by the school of music.

The service will consist of half an hour of sacred music starting at 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon. It is in response to the widespread desire on the part of both students and faculty members that the program is being presented.

Dean Theodore Kratt of the music school will announce details of the affair later.

through with the second of his acclaimed baskets to capture the next contest for the Ducks, 36 to 35. Just 20 seconds of the overtime period remained when tall Hank cashed in on his sensational shot. Over 6700 fans were in attendance at the time.

Ducks Dropped One

Oregon dropped its only one to the Beavers in the third contest, by one point, 24 to 23, at Corvallis. Guard Paul Valenti converted a free throw with six seconds left, after Oregon had led at halftime, 15 to 8. Vic Townsend provided 11 points for the Web-foot cause.

Hobson's boys captured the final contest at Eugene, 37 to 36, thanks to some cool playing by Captain Porky Andrews. With just one minute, 20 seconds remaining in the game, Porky canned two foul throws, giving the Ducks the tying and winning points.
