

Folk Songs Win Acclaim At Last Night's Concert

By CAROL GREENING

"I Want to Marry Me," a Norwegian folk song by Edvard Grieg about a too-boastful lover, proved most popular of Sigurd Nilssen's numbers in his recital last night in the music auditorium.

Excelling in dramatic and lively numbers, Mr. Nilssen, professor of voice at the University, also drew audience acclaim from "La Mousse de Biscaïe," a spirited French number.

Evans Accompanist

Accompanying Mr. Nilssen in his first three numbers were John Stark Evans, professor of music, at the organ, and Margaret Rose Steinmetz of Portland at the piano.

A group of early French songs, written in the eleventh to fifteenth centuries, and arranged by Gustave Michiels, were found to be musical morsels for a connoisseur's palate. They were the kind of songs after which there is a pause, then an outbreak of delighted clapping from the audience.

Talent Shown

In both these and Grieg's Norwegian group, Mr. Nilssen demonstrated his talent for interpreting dialect pieces, and imparting their meaning to the audience even though the tongue in which they are written is strange.

"Thanks be to God," Handel's arioso from Cantata for stringed instruments, displayed a beautiful correlation between the sweeping, powerful organ and piano passages, and Mr. Nilssen's excellent voice range and tone.

English Pieces

Three English pieces concluded the program, "A Kingdom by the Sea," by Arthur Somervell; "There Is a Lady," by Winifred Bury, and "When the Sergeant Major's on Parade," by Ernest Longstaff.

Encores at different stages of the program were: "Le Cor," by Flagiere; "Pall pa hougen," "Young Tom o' Devon," by Russell; "My Little Mohee," an American folksong.

Unusual Arrow Shown

One corner-tang projectile point was found in the collection of arrowheads presented by Mrs. Irene M. Day of Portland. This unusual specimen was attached to the handle at an oblique angle rather than straight. This type is usually found in Texas and Oklahoma.

This is the only known specimen of this type found in the Northwest. The point was found on Sauvies Island in the Columbia river near Portland.

Robert L. Stephenson, graduate assistant in anthropology, has prepared a short report on this specimen to be published in the journal, American Antiquity.

More aluminum up there, less in new telephones

— for VICTORY!

Many materials used in telephone making are listed as "critical" for war purposes. Bell Telephone Laboratories and Western Electric have redesigned apparatus and changed manufacturing methods to employ available materials.

Take aluminum. The reduction in its use in a year's telephone output is enough to build 294 combat planes. This program has been replacing critical materials at an annual rate of 7,747,000 pounds. Though it grows steadily more difficult to maintain as shortages increase, the program helps to meet the greatest demand in history for military and civilian communication equipment.
