Class Cards Form Basis For Ruling

A far-reaching series of ineligibility rulings last night struck present or prospective officers in the freshman, junior, and senior classes, and three major appointees to Junior Weekend. All students hit by the ruling failed to purchase class cards for spring term.

Don Cawley, junior in journalism and potential Greek nominee for senior class-president, was declared ineligible for nomination last night by Richard Williams, educational activities manager, after an Emerald inquiry.

2.0 Activity Rule Cuts First Teeth

In a shattering election eve move last night, the ASUO executive committee swept the decade-long class card controversy from the books by making the class poll tax illegal, refused any freshman class the right to organize politically before winter term, and put teeth into its new two-point GPA activity requirement. None of the legislation, however, will go into effect until next fall term.

It was one of the shortest, but most far-reaching, meetings this year's Torgeson-headed exec committee has held. Traditional political problems were destroyed one after another, as the 12 lawmakers assumed their constitutional power to disapprove by-laws of class constitutions and wiped out all legislation requiring class cards for activity participation or voting privileges.

Amplifying its 2.00 activity participation ruling of winter term, the committee adopted seven of the eight points of an enforcement program proposed by Dean of Men Virgil D. Earl last week. Teeth are given to the law by the requirement that the student in activities must be enrolled in 12 hours of school in order to participate. Also he must have a minimum grade point average of 2.00 for the last term registered in the University, as well as a 2.00 cumulative.

One Term

Dean Earl's suggestion that any activity participant be required to have completed one full term's work in the University before participation, which would have eliminated freshman fall term work, was not accepted. Instead, however, the committee voted to require that freshman class members not organize before the fifth day of winter term, or after the fourteenth day of winter term. This will eliminate fall term political contests.

Applications Due

Applications for the positions of editor and business manager of the 1943 student directory should be submitted to the educational activities office before next Saturday noon.

The coat checking concession and the position of head concert usher are also open to applicants. All applications should be written and should state qualifications and experience.

Ducks Nominate Officers Today

(See page 3 for class nominations)

Barring an eleventh-hour dark horse entry in the ASUO race, four students will be nominated from the Igloo floor this morning at 11 to fill the four top positions of the executive committee for the 1942-43 school year.

According to a list released last night by Jim Frost, first vice-president of the student body, the four students who submitted their declarations of intention to run and certificates of scholastic eligibility by the Sunday midnight deadline were:

- Les Anderson
- Mary Anderson
- Nancy Riesch
- Steve Worth

Worth and Miss Anderson are independent candidates, while Anderson and Miss Riesch are running on the Greek ticket.

Wes Sullivan Named 1943 Oregana Editor

Wes Sullivan, junior in journalism, was selected editor of the Oregana last night by the educational activities board.

The new editor, who has served this year as managing editor of the annual, reports that plans for the new book are well under way. "Every item and feature in the book this year will be included in the 1943 issue despite the reduction in budget," Sullivan said.

Former assistant news editor of the Emerald, the new year-book chief got his journalistic start on the Portland Franklin High Post, of which he was feature editor. He was also sports editor of his high school year-book.

His poems, signed J. W. S., are a daily feature of the Emerald. Sullivan is president of Campbell club and the inter-co-op council, and secretary of Druids, junior men's honorary. He is a candidate for senior representative on the executive committee.

Other candidates interviewed for the position were Roy Nelson, freshman in journalism and this year's assistant managing editor, and Helen Johnson, sophomore in health education and this year's woman's editor.
