Petite Carolyn Gives Glimpse into Deep Past

By BETTY ANN STEVENS

That the second vice-president of the ASUO, one of the most outstanding juniors at the University of Oregon, spent an evening in jail, was the admission of Alpha Chi's Carolyn Holmes.

To clear up any scandal that might arise, Carolyn, curled up with one leg tucked under her, on a bench on the libe smoking terrace, hastily explained that her sojourn in the bastille was prompted by a friendly policeman on Hollow-e'en, who took ten-year-old tom-boy Carolyn and her friends to jail for ice cream.

Family Affair

"The funny part about it, though," she continued, "was that when I got there my little brother was there, eating ice cream with his friends, and pretty soon they brought in my big brother with his friends."

A Phi Theta, ex-member of the rally committee, director of Red Cross, last year's campus social chairman, her advice to freshmen activities is, "In the first place, I don't think freshmen should carry too heavy a load of activities until they get oriented. At least wait until spring term before taking on activities." She went on, "Also, I think that activities are very worthwhile. You make friends that you keep for years. You're just as close as in a house."

A Californian (Berkeley), blond, small Carolyn, "I am too bigger," she objected, with an engaging grin. "I was always teased about my height. I am of medium height."

Carrying nineteen hours, she remarked to "Studying late?" with "I try not to, but I have been lately." Smilingly, she apologized. "I'm so sleepy right now it's pathetic. Goodness! You just don't have a chance to have bull sessions any more."

"Men?" Warily she answered, "No comment."

Watching an airplane over the library, she commented, "I wanted to take a CPT course—I passed the preliminaries and everything, then women were—" she groped for a word—"Well, discontinued," she concluded laughingly.

Versified J.W.S. gives Male Wail

By JOANNE DOLPH

J. Wesley Sullivan, better known as J.W.S., who writes those snappy little ditties for page one of the Emerald, thinks Oregon women are more desirable than Californians by a long shot. However, he conceded that the sun-kissed babes "become 'Oregonized' after awhile."

The first interviewee with a steady (although last week's victim was married) the 1943 Oregon editor was a bit uncertain as to just what might be the thing to say under the circumstances. "The Flame" (because of his ultra-ultra thatch) was really on the spot.

"What do I think a girl should have to be popular with men? Dell, she should be a live wire. She should hold up her end of the conversation and feel it her

Note to Susan

Remember, Susan, when this spring is gone,
There will be other songs to sing,
More nights to dream across a lawn
Star-dusted. It is a little thing,
This war—a simple wait
Between this year and others . . .
Except that songs are fickle things
And stars die out if left too late.

job to see that the fellow has a good time, too.

"Girls and fellow get along when they have a lot in common—the same likes and dislikes, I mean. You know, mutual friends and mutual interests. I positively do not think that opposites attract permanently." He wrinkled his brow. "Still people shouldn't be so similar that they become monotonous."

"I don't care if other women smoke and drink but I don't want my girl to especially. Do I object to slacks and nail polish? Let's just say that I prefer shorts!

What are my impressions when a girl asks me for a date—I mean, when girls asked me for dates? Definitely flattered. Don't they really like to ask boys to things? It's lots of fun to be asked."

As for dutch-treating, Wes says, "If the deal if my idea, I pay for it. If it's her idea and she wants to pay for it, I am the one to decide."

"Who am I to saw how women can be improved? I think they are nice enough!"
