Mass PE Setup Slated for Men

By JOE MILLER

Dean Ralph Leighton's plan for the mass physical education of all male students swings into action this fall, and it portends a revolutionary all-time change for the PE setup of the University of Oregon. Dean Leighton's plan is a unique one, compared to the other coast schools that are trying the mass PE experiment. In brief, here is the pattern it will follow:

1. Football and basketball—two terms of one of these sports for all men.
2. Track and field—two terms for all men.
3. Boxing, wrestling, tumbling and apparatus, weights, and judo—two terms of one of these sports for all men.
4. Swimming—two terms for all men.
5. An elective from any of the three groups after completion of these six required terms—four terms.

No Surface Stuff

Instead of skimming the surface of many sports, Dean Leighton's plan intensifies action in one particular sport and learning more than just the fundamentals of that sport. Southern California and Washington State challenge this idea and plan to spend only three weeks apiece on one sport, teaching merely the basic fundamentals. Oregon's setup starts with team games—if we get enough uniforms we'll play tackle football, according to former coach at the College of Idaho—then go into self-defense and body-building work and finish off with the swimming program.

"You can't learn a sport over a short period of time," he claims, "and furthermore you can't go from football into swimming in three weeks without straining and possibly injuring the muscles of the body. I can take a boy for three weeks and not be able to teach him a thing about boxing, but give me an entire term and I can make him a pretty clever boxer—this is true of any sport. You can't dabble."

Calisthenics Are "In"

Calisthenics are going to play an important supplementary part in the program, according to Dr. Leighton. A short warmup period before the games will help guard against anyone getting hurt. In track we will use arm exercises to build up the neglected upper part of the body. There will be corrective back exercises for the squad that is in the basketball program, and these entire exercises are expected to form a very integral part of our program, the dean stated.

Oliver's team will have no men weighing over 200 pounds in accordance with navy regulations, and should shape up to be an extremely mobile and tricky organization. The naval service team begins practice on August 15 and will have Four aces in a poker game is a "natural," and that is exactly what the impending clash between Lt. Commander "Tex" Oliver's gold-jerseyed naval men from the St. Marys air school and the University of Oregon Webfoots is shaping up to be. It's a four-star attraction, this opening battle to be played at Multnomah field in Portland on September 26.

Some of the "naturals" that Coach Oliver will play against his former team are Stanford's All-American Franky Albert, WSC's great end, "Pig" Gentry, and Bobby Grayson, former Stanford great from Portland. Also on this imposing squad are a score-odd pro football stars by the athletes for campus entertainment. An all-campus "Fite Nite" is going to be held in McArthur court, pairing off the finalists in the all-campus boxing tournament. Fall term the Greeks and Independents will meet in an all-star football game, and a tentative game against the intramural all-stars of Oregon State is scheduled.
