Honors Won By 13 Seniors

Out of the 518 baccalaureate degrees granted this year by the University of Oregon, 13 went to seniors who had successfully completed honors work and were granted bachelor's degrees with honors, it was learned here recently. A thesis involving original research is required of all students receiving such a degree.

Those who received bachelor's degrees with honors are as follows: Helen Angell, Marjorie Clear, Clinton S. McGill, Elizabeth Plankington, Jerome B. Shank, Ruth Cole, Jeanne Marie DeNeffe, Hope M. Hughes, Alice Luvaas, Janet Morris, Nicholas Riasanovske, Milton M. Small, and Billie Jean Dexter.

Two master's degrees with honors were also granted this year. They went to William Avery Cass and Steven Vincente Davis.

Eighty-five per cent of Harvard students are "convinced the United States was right in entering the war."

University of Michigan student organizations gave 637 parties during the 1940-41 school year.

Vacation is Over . . .

Yes, vacation is over. But not for Tommy. On nice days when he can't stand school any more, he plays hookey. People say that he's a bright boy, and that if he'd apply himself and stick to his schooling, he'd amount to something someday.

It's all very well for them to talk; but if they had eyesight like Tommy's, they'd play hookey, too, from difficult eye tasks. Studying makes Tommy tired—nervous, irritable. If his parents only realized that he is one of the 20% of school children with defective vision, and would have his eyesight examined and corrected, they'd be surprised how well he'd do in school . . . and how the inclination to play hookey would disappear.

Remember—one child in five has defective vision—and that child may be yours.
