

Law Careers Attract Five Oregon Women

By RUTH VAN BUSKIRK

A three-year law course following two years of diversified subjects is task enough for men; but this year twenty-five per cent of the students enrolled in the law school are women, showing that women can "take it," too. They unflinchingly consider the years of hard work—the many nights of "burning the midnight oil" in the law library.

All of them are friendly, well-rounded girls—socially and academically. Call any one of them, however, most any time and you'll get the reply, "You can reach her at law school." Caught at work, indeed!

Matilda Barecevic stated with a laugh when asked why she had chosen law, "Well, there have never been any lawyers in my family—and it sounded like a good major to me!" She sees great opportunities in the field of tax law.

Law Sounded Interesting

Sue Minor groaned softly at the question and murmured, "Golly, what a spot! But really, I took it because it sounded interesting—and I like it—so far! No, I haven't any definite plans yet," she concluded.

"Law is a good thing to have to fall back on if you need to," Shirley Gravely seriously pronounced—"but personally, I'd rather get married and leave law practice to the men!"

How the men look upon this "sudden surge" to the law school was stated concisely by Carl Water, "We certainly feel for the women," he proclaimed, "but it's a good background. The fact is, women with a legal background ought to make better wives!—How?—Why by maintaining discipline in the family, of course!"

Women Lawyers Needed

Jeanette Thatcher, senior woman in law, however, considers that women have a very definite place in active law. "Now, with men being called into the service and with all the war prosperity and other current problems there is more demand than ever for lawyers—and for women lawyers!"

Betty Lee Stewart is the fifth of the women enrolled in the

Dear Spook

Here is news in spades! Connie Fagan, acting in the capacity of her new job, is going to present a fashion show for the women of the University of Oregon. In her letter she described enough of the clothes to make me wild with anticipation of seeing the real thing. "One that we expect to be most popular," she writes, "is the off-red velveteen suit, whose jacket has scalloped edge down the front with interesting gold buttons that can be matched in earrings." As if that weren't enough, she continued, "Because lines are to be simple and colors brilliant we designed a vivid green crepe with peg-top skirt; the only decoration being a glittering black clip near the left shoulder." Of course Connie couldn't resist adding a postscript to her letter saying that she had bought the first coat of natural nylon fleece on the west coast.

Our houseboys are about to split a gusset because they are so mad at me. They don't seem to understand that you've got to keep angora sweaters in the refrigerator if you want to keep them nice! Brushing the sweater makes it look a lot better, but keeping it in an ice-cold place stops it from becoming matted.

You were right about the Oregon weather, and now I am glad that you insisted upon my buying that natural colored, red-lined raincoat, the red rubber boots (they survived the rubber drive by a miracle), and especially the red so-wester. My roommate came here unprepared and nearly drowned until her mother sent her a Red-Riding-Hood. The hood protects her hair and it's the envy of many of us.

After reading Connie's letter I decided on a shopping tour for this P.M. Something in a pale lavender wool seems to appeal—full description later.

Hurriedly yours,
Gerry Stowell.

AWS Notes

All out for body conditioning! No, we aren't P.E. majors, and we don't cover the P.E. department, and we aren't even the athletic type, but it's best to be prepared for that gruelling event, "Coed Capers." Senior girl cops, who will be decked out in borrowed lettermen's sweaters for the event, are rumored to be, according to sources close to the publicity committee of the Capers, allegedly enrolling in body conditioning classes in order to be in the pink to eject all males so insane as to invade Gerlinger the eve of November 12. (pant, pant.) Perhaps a little morale-building is needed too, to get up enough nerve to wear some of those gruesome costumes. Remember the house that arrived in diapers last year?

THE PLUG DEPARTMENT: This is a plug to remember, you activity-minded and non-activity-minded kiddies. . . . Be sure and do your good deed a day either at the Red Cross center at Chapman (third floor) or some typing, etc., for the enlisted reserve corps in Commerce.

"Penny" Nichols and "Pewee" Ross are two activity acrobats in charge of the Phi Theta assembly next Tuesday (Gerlinger, 4:00). It promises to be another "bang-up (unquote) affair, with lots of real, "clever-like" entertainment. In charge of the three skits are Mary Bentley, Rohda Harkson, and Barbara Lamb. Two males, in the persons of Sig Eps Keith Hoppes and Bob Mundt, will also present something humorous.

No kiddin', AWS is pulling off its long-awaited assembly with Mr. Hoyt Franchere lecturing on "The Rise of Jazz." They're still dickering for the music auditorium. It's going to be good, in caps.

Must remind you that "it's a woman's world" again.

Popular Duds For Showers

"The Rains Came" and with them the ever-present campus coat that coeds wear nine months out of nine. Mist, cloudbursts, and downpours, so haven't seen a dress or skirt all week. Result—here are a few coats that help shed the liquid sunshine.

Barbara Bealer steps out in a finger length coat of bright Kelly green, and incidentally she has suede shoes to match . . . Jamie Brugger brightens her corner with a cheerful red box coat . . . Notice Jean Thompson's checkered brown and white coat . . . Orchids to Nelda Rohrback for having three smart topcoats—one light blue, one brown, and one grey . . . Penny Nichols dashes about the Shack wearing a brown and white shepherd check . . . Kay Hitchcock is another well-red gal—yes, it is a box coat with big buttons . . . Hope Carline Pelly brought her smooth yellow coat back . . . Bonnie Uhl's soft wool coat is a brown and blue mixture—you'll like it . . . Mary E. Ellsworth goes to speech class in a light brown Teddy Bear . . . Pat Goss has, or rather had, a good looking red coat but since the night of a certain fraternity dessert it has been missing . . . I wonder . . . Goldie Puziss wears a gun-metal gray raincoat that does things for her auburn hair . . . Barbara Bell's sporting a short fingertip length number of Kelly green . . . Elaine Benioff is another lucky gal with an oatmeal beige Walloby coat trimmed in green, she also has a red rain-
