

IF A BUDDY MEET A BUDDY-

By BETTY LU SIEGMAN

With the appointment early this month of George Jones as a foreign correspondent for United Press to cover the war in the Pacific, the University of Oregon school of journalism has trained at least five war correspondents, including Jones, Jay Allen, Jack Bellinger, Don Caswell, and Reuel S. Moore. The career of each is in many respects similar, for most of them were born in Oregon, Jones being born in Eugene, and most of them worked on small Oregon newspapers before joining one of the press services. All of them are members of Sigma Delta Chi, journalism fraternity.

Jones worked on the Register-Guard while he attended the University of Oregon. After his graduation in 1937 he worked for the Associated Press and the Capital Journal in Salem. By 1939 he was with the United Press in Seattle, and in May this year he was transferred to San Francisco. His present assignment to a point somewhere in the Pacific was made through that office.

Urged U.S. War Entrance

Jay Allen, who attended the University of Oregon in 1923, is well-known for his coverage of the war in Spain in 1938 and his subsequent imprisonment in Germany by the Nazis in 1940. Upon his release he returned to the United States and spoke before a student assembly at the University in October, 1941, at which time he urged the entrance of the United States into the war. Allen is now lecturing in the United States. Before reporting the war he was employed by the Esquire syndicate to edit the magazine, "Ken," and during a lull in his career in 1939 he spent some time at the new school of social research in New York City.

Japanese Prisoner

Jack Bellinger, a member of the class of 1933, was one of the American nationals to be returned to the United States from Japan on the liner Gripsholm. He was one of seven American newspapermen arrested in held by the Japanese in Tokyo and Yokohama. Before his imprisonment in 1942 he was on the staff of the Japan Times.

His other activities include that of a teaching assistant in journalism at the University of Minnesota and employment with the United Press in Salem. He recently returned to the campus, where he told of his war experiences.

Top Staff Man

Don Caswell, who was graduated in 1934, started with the United Press in Salem, later becoming manager of that press service in Spokane. By 1937 he was with the San Francisco office as sports correspondent, a "top staff man." In 1942 the United Press sent him to Australia and he is now covering operations from that vantage point.

Reuel S. Moore, although majoring in mathematics while at the University took a great interest in journalism activities. Upon his graduation in 1921 he soon went into the newspaper game. By 1929 he was chief of the United Press bureau in Honolulu and from 1930-1936 he was the press correspondent for that service in Manila. Transferring to London in 1937, he became head of the traffic department of the United Press. When in March of this year he was granted a two months' vacation, he returned to the University of Oregon campus, and told his experiences in war-torn London.

Harold Wyatt, a lieutenant in the reserve corps, who has been acting director of the municipal research service in Fenton hall, received notice to report for duty October 27 to Fort Warren, Wyoming, where he will take up quartermaster training.

Wyatt was assistant director of the Portland branch of the municipal research for 1940 and 1941. He acted as head of the Eugene bureau during the absence of Herman Kehrli, now with the budget bureau in Washington, D. C. Wyatt requested a one-year leave of absence.

Kehrli, whose leave of absence would have expired December 1, has been granted an extension for seven months.

Two former students and one graduate of the University recently laid aside their ratings in the army's non-commissioned officer ranks to pick up the gold bars of second lieutenants.

The men, all from Portland, are John T. Allen, '38, Robert F. McCarl, and Peter Klosterman, who attended the University for two years and one year, respectively.

The new officers, after completing 12 intensive weeks of study in the medical administrative corps officer candidate school in the fourth and largest class since the school was started several months ago, received their diplomas and certificates of commission on October 17.

Wilbur Bishop, '42, is an aviation cadet taking pilot training at Mather field, California.

Corporal Harry Prongas, ex-'42, is training at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. John William Mitchell, '39, is reported "somewhere in Australia." He is a second lieutenant in the infantry.

Frank H. Albrecht, '42, ranks as a second lieutenant in the army at Camp Robinson, Ark.; while John Andrew Giesy, ex-'40, is a third class signalman with the convoy control unit at Key West, Florida.

PCC Games Loom Today

ties from his left halfback position, and on his massive shoulders will rest the bulk of the Bears' offensive plans.

The Stanford Indians found themselves last weekend and at the expense of Southern Cal, whose gridders were shrouded in rosy-colored visions of Pasadena's Rose Bowl. True, the House of Troy was sitting pretty after tipping over the Washington State Cougars. But it just wasn't in the cards for a Trojan win.

Big Job for Stanford

Stanford has a bigger job on her hands this week. The Indians must cope with the hottest club in the circuit as of today, the UCLA Bruins. It will be T-formation vs. QT-formation, truly a sportsman's paradise. Buck Fawcett, the husky 200-pounder who races around ends from his fullback position, will carry the Cardinal hopes. Stanford's forward wall is one of the toughest in the PCC and it is through this iron-bound wall that Bruin backs Snelling, Solari and Waterfield will have to scamper. This is a ball game, and the Palo Alto customers are to be envied.

Oregon State took a trimming last week from the Cougars of Washington State, and this week will attempt to stop the state of Washington's supremacy. The Huskies of Seattle way are smarting from their upset at the hands of the California Bears last week-end and will be out to carve a win for themselves. Erikson, great Husky tailback, has been shifted to the full position and it is figured by Pesky Welch, Washington mentor, that Erikson's bucking ability will swing the decision to the Purple and Gold.

Ball game number four this week is the somewhat minor Idaho-Montana clash. The Vandals hit Eugene last Saturday and although losing to Oregon, they gave indication that, when in their own class, they can make things mighty tough for their opponents. Montana relies on Dick Bowman, one of the better quarterbacks on the Pacific slope this year. Idaho retaliates with her by now famous Manson - to - Berlus passing combination.

Santa Clara-USF

Tomorrow San Francisco's Kezar Stadium will play host to a traditional non-conference battle between two of the stronger independents, USF and Santa Clara. At first glance, the Broncos appear to be too strong for Al Tassi's Hilltoppers. But this is supposed to be USF's strongest club in history and that might spell u-p-s-e-t in capital letters.

See you at the stadium ...

George Halas, owner-coach of the Chicago Bears, mightiest team in footballdom recently went into the navy as a lieutenant-commander. His action was one-in-a-hundred as the pro ranks have not been heavily depleted since Pearl Harbor. The same stars that led the scoring parade of last year's pro football race, are in many instances repeating their action.
