

Things You Can Buy For 'That Swell Guy'

By MARY ANN CAMPBELL

So, my sweet, you're in a quandary about what would be exceedingly suitable for HIM . . . you know, the only man in your life. Your worries should be at least partially over. The women's page staff, with all their usual amiability, have put their curly heads together and evolved a list of suggestions which ought to bring one Bright Idea, anyhow, to your mind.

In case he's in the Armed Forces, or in case he isn't, too, he would appreciate a writing case, which is all fitted up with paper, pencil, envelopes, and pockets for stamps and unanswered letters, and even has a place for addresses. You can get paper all decorated with insignia for whichever branch of the service he happens to be in.

He might like a duffle bag for his shaving things. You can find very elegant ones, too, which have all the shaving things in them.

A leather kit containing brushes, a comb, a soap box and other aids to looking grand enough to please the colonel or sergeant, or somebody like that, would be most acceptable.

In case you don't know him too awfully well but don't want him to forget you entirely, send him a carton or three of his favorite cigarettes. The cigarette companies are most co-operative about getting them to his camp.

A non-breakable mirror will solve some of his packing worries . . . he can be sure he won't end up with bits of shattered glass in his handkerchiefs and seven years of horrible luck to haunt him.

A box of shoe shine things, that is a miracle of neatness and compactness, won't break your bank account in half, yet will do lots of good service.

Nobody appreciates a mending kit quite as much as a poor man who has lost some buttons or acquired a hole and who hasn't any needles or thread or buttons. If you provide him with these things, he will sooner or later call you thrice-blessed.

If he's a rabid checker player, you might give him a minute box containing the board and checkers, which all packs into nothing, practically, and is made so the checkers won't fall . . . whoosh . . . off the board if the game is supported on the players' knees.

Then there is always the matter of FOOD! Cookies are perfect . . . or maybe he loves fancy cheeses . . . or possibly some unusual jams with fancy crackers or zweiback to spread 'em on. You'll be popular not only with him, but with all his friends as well, if you kick through with some eatables.

Or, if you have enough time, you can get regulation yarn and regulation patterns and produce a sweater, a scarf, some socks, or gloves right off the end of your knitting needles.

PTA Community Sing

Miss Maude Garnett, associate professor of public school music at the University, will direct the community sing for the Parent-Teachers association at the River Road grade school on Friday, December 4.

Miss Garnett is chairman of the music program for the Oregon Congress of the PTA. For the past several years she has been active in directing group singing for the various PTA groups throughout the state.

ADS Initiates

Alpha Delta Sigma, men's national advertising honorary, last Friday night concluded its fall term schedule of activity with a dinner during which six pledges were initiated.

Those initiated were Max Miller, Dwayne Heathman, Bob Gilson, John Jensen, Allen Rouse, and Jim Harrison.
