

Canned Goods Rationing Faces UO Cooks in New Point System

Time marches on, and in a few weeks every kitchen on the campus along with every kitchen in the United States will face a definite food rationing program, according to an announcement by the OPA designating exactly what will be rationed.

Canned goods are the items hit in the project. The average is five cans or bottles of rationed items per person, but this doesn't include cans containing less than eight ounces, such as small cans of baby food. It will be regarded as a penalty if a person draws any amount over this total.

Program Itemized

Main points of the rationing program are the following:

1. Foods which will be rationed include all canned or bottled fruits, vegetables, soups, juices, baby foods, frozen fruits and vegetables, and dried fruits.

Point System

2. Each person will have a certain share which will be fixed in total points per rationing period (which may be one month or some other length of time.)

Each item will be assigned a point value, meaning that scarcer goods will be worth more points than others. The points may be changed from time to time.

Letters, Numbers

The ration stamps will bear point totals (8, 5, 2, and 1) and letters (A, B, C, etc.) which will indicate the period in which they may be used.

As an example, if A, B, and C stamps are made valid for the first period, the point total for that period would be 48. (This figure has been mentioned frequently, but OPA hasn't announced its decision.)

Stamp No. 19

3. This includes the problem of obtaining a ration book, which each family must have. Some member of each family must take their No. 1 ration books (the one used for sugar and coffee) to the local rationing board's office.

The rationing clerk will pencil an "X" across stamp No. 19 to indicate that the holder has received book No. 2. (Then he will get back book No. 1, which will continue to be used for sugar and coffee.) Persons must state on a family basis how many cans and bottles of rationed items they have.

Penalties

4. Penalties. This was explained by the following example: If there are four persons in a family and they have 24 cans, that would be four over the limit; so the clerk would take one 8-point stamp out of each of the family's four books.

The size of these extra cans doesn't make any difference as long as they are 8-ounces or larger. Home-canned goods don't count.

Meat Rationing Later

Each book contains 24 of the 8-point blue-colored stamps. If a family doesn't have enough of these to cover the penalties, the clerk is to make a note of it on the books, and the remainder of the penalty will apply to any future ration books.

Blue stamps will be for canned and bottled goods, while red stamps in the same book will be Melander looked at the disk and said, "A Ted Lewis. That's worth about a nickel."

"A nickel?" shot back the customer indignantly.

The proprietor repeated himself and held out his palm. The customer paid him, tucked the record under his arm, plunked his hat on his head, and stumped out of the shop. Melander rang up the sale and turned to the next customer when suddenly his jaw fell and his eyebrows flew up to his hairline.

"My God," he gasped, "do you know who that was?"

"Yeah," drawled the other. "Ted Lewis."
