friendly until I asked him a leading question. Then they turned to cold steel. Stalin means steel you know."

Abbe resumed his typing. We couldn't help noticing how much this vitality-packed little man with the billiard-blitz haircut and the deep-set eyes resembled a gnome or pixie.

"That's a swell picture of Hitler," we said, looking at a sharp clearcut glossy of the Nazi Fuehrer which Abbe took while working on the Berliner Zeitung.

Hitler's Choice

"Yes," Abbe replied, while reading a batch of notes over the silver rimmed glasses on his pointed nose. "It's Hitler's own favorite. He's a hard man to photograph. Stubborn chin, and the mustache. Couldn't ask him to remove the mustache, though." "Do you think Hitler's dead?" "Any man can be dead," Abbe retorted. "Do you listen to my programs?"

"No."

Ideal

"Got a brainstorm the other night," started the globe-trotting author of "I Photographed Russia," of his own accord. "Asked my audience who they thought would be best qualified to be mythical universal ruler of the post war world, if such was possible. Told them to write me their choice, and who they thought mine would be."

"We've got over 300 letters, cards, and telegrams already," injected Virgil Smith, KGW news editor who was hunched over a nearby desk sorting the mail in piles. Everybody from Jesus Christ to Eleanor Roosevelt has been mentioned."

Papal Qualifications

"Who's your choice?" we asked.

"Promise you won't tell before tonight's program. You'll be the first to know," he said, with a friendly twinkle of the eye that is catching.

"We promise. Who is he, she, or it?"

"Eugene Pachelli," he replied. "He's now Pope Pius XII."

"Think he'd take the job?" we asked.

"He'd be a fool if he did, but he surely is qualified for the job."

Abbe, and More Abbe

We kept thumbing through the seemingly endless scrap book of pictures by Abbe and of Abbe. Among the best was the picture story, "Behind the German Smoke-Screen," which Abbe did in 1932 with H. R. Knickerbocker.

Abbe was now working intently via the hunt and peck, apologizing from time to time for not being able to devote more time to us, jumping up every four minutes to answer the phone or talk to "Pang."

The telephone rang again, "Dingy-ding-ding."

"Awww, stop," Abbe retorted annoyed.

American Bag

"The Americans in North Africa?" he repeated to our query. "It's going to be a tough job. The Germans are in strongly fortified positions on a high plateau. About 150,000 of them. As I see it, as things stand now the British hold the assets, while the Americans are stuck with the liabilities."

A good looking blond girl with distinct Abbe features, and the Abbe self-confidence entered. We dropped North Africa, turned to more interesting items.

"Hmmm," we said.

"Patience," he said.

"Hmmm," we repeated. "Very pleased to meet you."

UO Guests

Patience Abbe of "I Patience" fame is the female part of the Abbe child trio who wrote the best seller "Around the World in 11 Years." Patience and her two brother co-authors will accompany their father to the Dads' day luncheon.

"What will I do for shoes now, Dad?" the comely Patience asked her father.

"We'll go barefoot like we did in Russia," Abbe told his daughter-adviser.

Abbe has promised to wear however. But beyond this promise, you can expect anything... shoes to the Dads' day luncheon, anything.

Actress Plays Glamour Role In 'Town Talk'

Becoming glamorous in two short months is a difficult task for an actress, according to Louise Rossman. She drew the assignment a short time ago for the part of Letty Lythe, a vivacious movie actress, in "The Whole Town's Talking," second Guild Hall production of the year.

Miss Rossman is working on a Katherine Hepburn voice for the glittering Letty, but is making no attempt to imitate the noted actress' movements and gestures.

Hardest part of the role is trying to be charming in the Hollywood manner. "You feel like you are making a fool of yourself in the part, but its fun trying to be glamorous," says Louise.

Last term she had the role of a 60-year-old dowager in the Guild Hall play, "Watch on the Rhine," another difficult characterization. During her junior year she was a member of the stage crew working in "Of Thee I Sing," "Of Mice and Men," and "Wingless Victory."

Performances of "The Whole Town's Talking" are set for February 12, 13, 17 and 18. Reserved seat tickets may be obtained at the box office from 10 to 12 m. and 1 to 5 p.m. All seats are reserved and priced at 55 cents.
