The Story and Glory of the Casaba Men

Practice Weeks Are Culminated By All-League Hoop Choices

Day after day, week after week, for the past month-and-a-half, intramural basketball has been played and practiced consistently.

Even before the beginning of this term, before Christmas vacation to be exact, plans were being laid and plays were being dreamed up. Every once in a while, a bunch of fellows could be seen up on the maple courts just playing around with a ball and priding themselves if they were able to sink one shot in five.

Practice Sessions

Often during the two-week holiday period, individual players made use of their various local grade and high school gyms, building up their stamina, leg muscles, and trying to "find their eye."

The, with the first week of the new term, 55 squads, registering a total of 500 men, swamped the PE building and began fighting with each other for the use of the two main hoop-courts in search of a precious half-hour's practice session. Usually all they eventually secured, if lucky, was the playing space around one of the six baskets found in each court.

The intramural department came to the rescue at this time, much to the profound relief of athletic managers—by formulating a systematic training schedule intended to curb the general confusion. It was in this week that the teams began looking like teams and not as so many wild wolves trying to get their paws on the casaba for a shot at the hemp.

The coaches cleaned off a few obvious rough spots and the starting line-ups took on a new coat of polish.

Now, with the preliminaries over, the battle began. Every afternoon three to six contests were hotly disputed as the basketball-minded lads romped back and forth to the sound of pounding feet, a bouncing ball, smashing body contacts, noisy shouts, and a referee's shrill whistle.

And More Drills

Extra practices would take place in any vacant nook or corner. (Please turn to page eight)

Igloo Items W. Borrevik

By DON LONIE

This is the beginning of a tall tale 'bout a short man, who is just short of being taller than tall. It's Wallace "Wally" Borrevik, Oregon's gift to the clouds. Wally is the reason they had to build the "Igloo" with a fifth story roof and at least a tenth of a reason why the Saturday Oregon State story was what it was Saturday night.

Four years ago the Borrevik family of Reedsport had the right idea. With tear in eye, but hope in heart they sent their bubbling bambino on his way towards the Oregon campus, where, as the ad has participated in one less game.

Only other appreciable juggling among the leaders came when Chuck Gilmur canned a dozen to leap into fourth place over Gail Bishop, Washington State, with 106.

Top six scorers:

Morris, Wash.	12	57	32	146
Quinn, Idaho	11	56	24	136
Beck, OSC	10	40	32	112
Gilmur, Wash.	12	44	18	106
Bishop, WSC	9	45	14	104
Wiley, Oregon	12	33	22	88

in the paper said, "We Want Men!" Well, men they wanted and man they got, a great big hunk of a man who in his sophomore year scored 49 points for the green and yellow tornado team.

Close Battle

The contest for center position this year has been almost neck and neck, with the necks belonging to Roger Wiley and Wally Borrevik respectively. When one knows the facts, however, Wally's apparent sudden flash in the sports pan and then a recent drop into a struggle to keep his position as center is not alarming at all but really remarkable. Last year he suffered a brain concussion which kept him out of school and away from ball the full year. The fact that he is back on the floor this winter term is a lesson in spunk and spirit.

With an almost perfect sense of coordination, about the only thing, then, that our 6 foot 8 1/2 inch junior lacks is experience. Incidentally Wally is the tallest man on the coast speaking in terms of basketball, and certainly the tallest player on the Oregon squad.

A sideline on Mr. Borrevik the Reedsport gang knows him affectionately as "The Stork," obviously only because of his long legs.

Swimming Records Come and Go

Oregon Mermen Out to Beat Splash Marks at Pool Today

By ROLLIE GABEL

Breaking the 400-yard freestyle relay record will be the omnipotent factor dominating the time trials that will be held this afternoon at the men's pool at 4:00.

Coach Mike Hoyman believes that the chances for breaking this record are very good. The time that will have to be made in order to break this record will also have to be good, in fact it will have to be under 3:43.2. A time of 3:43.8 was made the other day in an unofficial clocking, which leads Coach Hoyman to believe that these few seconds that are just over and above the existing time can be dropped very easily.

Relay Men

Tomorrow in the time trials, Coach Hoyman has seven men as potential candidates for the four-man relay team. Nelson, Smith, Allen, Hoffman, Gautier, Houston, and Fox, are the seven candidates of whom four will be chosen to swim in the meet at Seattle this coming Saturday.

Another event that is on the fire for the time trial today will be the 200-yard breaststroke event between Huestis and McAuliffe. McAuliffe, although only a freshman on the swimming team, has been pacing record-smashing Huestis in the previous time trials that have been held.

A third event that will be held will be the 150 freestyle event.

These events are in preparation (Please turn to page eight)

Husky Ace Snags Lead

Fred Quinn, Idaho's hooper-dooper score-monger, finally was unseated from his scoring easy chair, and with a rough jolt by Billie Morris, Washington's rough-and-tough guard. In the second tilt when the Huskies and Vandals tore into each other, Quinn was chained hand and foot and could only come up with six forlorn counters to raise his season total to 136.

Meanwhile Boisterous Bill was plunking the seed in at a merry clip, a point every other minute in fact, and came out of the skirmish with no less than 20 and with the league scoring lead in the palm of his hand. He now is 10 up on Quinn, who incidentally
