Vital War, Peace Job Offers Chance to Coeds

By BETTY LU SIEGMAN

There is a great need for nurses at present, particularly those who have had some college training, according to Karl W. Onthank, dean of personnel administration, who suggests the tremendous opportunities and importance of this career

With larger numbers of doctors being called into service there is especially a greater demand for nurses on both the home and battle fronts.

The common agreement today is that nursing is a high class prefession rather than the undistinguished job by which it was charrized many years ago.

Nursing Head Named

Miss Leona E. Tyler, assistant professor of psychology, has been named by Elnora E. Thomson, head of the nursing education department in Portland, as councilor to girls on the Oregon campus who are considering entering nursing, according to Dean On-

Miss Ruth Wheelock, associate professor of nursing education at Portland, is the adviser for girls already enrolled in the nursing course. She will be on the campus one day each week to fill this position.

Two Types

Nursing schools are of two types: Collegiate schools, whose programs are geared to a college level and prepare students for the arger opportunities of service responsibility in the field of nursing, (college students are encouraged to select a school of this type); and hospital schools, where students receive their training while working and learning in a hospital.

The University of Oregon, of the former type, holds membership in the Association of Collegiate Schools of Nursing and is approved by the National Organization for Public Health Nurs-

Basic Two Years

Students at the University who are majoring in nursing education are required to devote two years to general and basic subjects in preparation for professional work at the medical school and in hospitals.

According to the Nursing Inmation Bureau, the preferred age is 20 to 25; the acceptable age range is 18 to 35. Some university schools of nursing, offering a combination four or fiveyear program leading to the nursing diploma and the college degree, admit qualified high school graduates at the age of 17.

Covers Three Years

The general nursing course usually covers a period of three years. It includes 1,200-1,300 hours of organized instruction and 4,400-5,000 hours of supervised nursing practice.

Hours of instruction are apportioned between the following subjects: biological and physical sciences, social sciences, medical sciences, and nursing and allied arts.

"For yours is one of the very w professions in all the world of doubt and struggle which transcend the conflict and evoke respect and gratitude from all men everywhere," said Walter Lippmann in an address to nurses in 1941, truly characterizing the nursing profession.

Demand Great

The demand for well qualified nurses is so great that graduates of good schools of nursing are assured positions, once they have their licenses to practice. Nursing is primarily a woman's profession; and in it women, with no appreciable competition from men, hold most of the strategic sitions.

According to the Information bureau, college women who demonstrate professional competence combined with initiative, courage and interest, can find a deeply satisfying career in nursing. Many of the responsible positions are open only to nurses who have a college degree and who in addition have specialized in some clinical phase of the profession, such as psychiatric, orthopedic, or obstetric nursing; or have completed special advanced programs of study in teaching, supervision, or administration in their field of concentration, such as institutional nursing, public health nursing, or nursing education.

Tuition Varies

Tuition fees range from nothing to $2,000. The higher fees are usually charges by schools connected with colleges and universities. The average tuition fee of hospital schools for the country as a whole, is only $75 for the entire three-year program.

Scholarships are granted by a number of nursing schools and funds have also been appropriated by the federal government which enable schools to remit tuition fees for some deserving students.

Civil Service

Stressing that the nursing service provided by both professional and auxiliary workers is vital to winning the war, the national information bureau has stated several types of the profession including the following:

Civil service positions, including those in U.S. public health service, veterans administration, and bureau of Indian affairs; military positions, such as army and navy nurse corps; nursing education, made up of instructors in nursing arts, science, and clinical service; and public health, comprising state, county, local, or voluntary agencies; and hospital and institutional nursing, made up of general or special hospitals and institutions for convalescents.

Auxiliary nursing, those who make their contribution by the care of patients on the home front and are ineligible for appointment to the Army or Navy Nurse corps, volunteer nurse's aides, who perform necessary services chiefly in hospitals or clinics by assisting the regular doctors and nurses, other volunteer workers, such as those who have had Red Cross training in home nursing.

Salaries range all the way from $825 with maintenance in the lower positions to $7,500 in advanced work.

Those who are encouraged to prepare for this vital profession are young women who have a liking for people, are alert and dependable, have inquiring minds, and a sense of adventure as well as a spirit of service.

Former UO Student Dies in California

Word was received this week of the death of Jess Hawley, former University student and recently superintendent of schools at Fillmore, California. Mr. Hawley received his BA degree from the Santa Barbara state teachers' college, later earning his MA at the University of Oregon.

He had also completed all course work to obtain a degree of doctor of education at this institution. Hawley was a member of the Masonic lodge. His wife was the former Helene Du Prau.

Dr. R. P. Bowen, head of the honors committee, requests all students intending to take honors to see him in 116 Friendly hall, "immediately."

Bernard Hubbard, Santa Clara university's Glacier priest, thinks it would be a mistake to force the Japanese out of Kiska right now, since Kiska is "a rat trap."

ADVERTISING MAJORS

To those of you who are interested in making advertising your future vocation, the Oregon Daily Emerald Business Office affords you an opportunity to gain practical experience in the field.

The activities of the Business Office cover advertising layout and copy, sales and account management. . . . Actual experience which you can coordinate with the theory taught in your daily class work.

Positions on the business staff are open to freshmen, sophomores, juniors, or seniors. Previous experience in selling or advertising is not absolutely necessary to qualify for a place in this department of the Emerald.

Students interested in advertising should not forego an opportunity of this kind. There are few student activities which offer direct contacts to the individual with the business world and the men who are active in its operations.

For further information inquire at the Oregon Daily Emerald business office, Room 5, Journalism, between the hours of 1 and 5 o'clock any afternoon.
