

'Boob' Handcuffs Huskies

Webfoots Take Two Straight; Win 2-1

By FRED BECKWITH

Lean John Bubalo was Mr. Big for the Oregon baseballers yesterday. Fairly dripping with control, the captain of the Ducks choked off a last inning death stand by the Washington Huskies, and walked off with a 2-1 victory safely tucked away in his hip pocket.

The win left Oregon riding high on a one-game victory wave lead over the balance of the field. The invading Seattle crew bowed, 5-4 the previous day to the Hobsonmen and thus actually suffered three losses out of four games played in its jaunt through Oregon, Oregon State having split a two-game series with the Huskies.

Hurling Joust

Yesterday's affair was perhaps the best pitching duel that Northern Division fans will witness during the 1943 collegiate season. With Bubalo on the mound for the Ducks, and talented Doug Ford doing the pitching honors for the enemy, it was a scoreless battle for six and one-half innings.

Oregon came up in the last of the lucky seventh, frantically searching for a way to grab hits and runs off the fireball twirlings of the lanky Ford.

Farrow and Murphy were easy outs, and with two away, things looked dismal. But Lefty Caviness smacked out a single and reposed on the initial sack. Barney Koch who hadn't gotten himself a good hit for goodness-knows-how-long, crashed an outside fast ball pitch into the deep expanses of center field.

The game was played on the lower diamond, as Howe Field's Number One playing unit wasn't in good condition. Well, the Koch drive rolled out through the shrubbery, and both Caviness and Koch scampered home.

Apparently Barney had knocked out a home run. But the umpire said no, "He gets a two-bagger on ground rules," and Caviness was forced to pull up at third.

Tex Warren, the Husky center fielder didn't have a prayer of relaying that pill into the plate to nip either runner, but the decision went the other way.

"Score" Again

And so the Oregon cheers that went up died out like a losing political party. But the groans were shortlived. For red-headed Bill Hamel poled out a drive for the wife and Oregon, and when the dust had cleared, the two green-and-gold base runners were across the platter with the margin of victory, and Doctor Hamel was safe on first with a grin as big as that of the perennial Cheshire.

Burns, the next man, followed up with the fourth hit of the inning off the rapidly faltering Ford, but Kirsch was retired for the third out. The damage, however, had been done. Oregon had her margin of victory.

Bubalo took the hill to blot out the Huskies from then on in, yielding a ninth inning tally thanks to a passed ball by Carlson, a bingle by Bill Gissberg and an eventual fielder's choice.

All in all, Washington came up with only five hits. Three of these safeties were accomplished by the aforementioned Gissberg who had a big day at the bat, collecting three hits for four trips to the dish.

John Bubalo did not walk a strike.

Sigma Chi, Kappa Sig Outfit Get Wins on Abbreviated Slate

By BILL DYER

At least half of the scheduled games were played yesterday in the intramural softball tournament.

Sigma Chi walloped the Phi Psi crew, 8 to 2, and Kappa Sigma barely sipped over an up-ising Campbell club, 4 to 3.

The boys from the Campbell club gave Warren Taylor, ace Kappa Sigma hurler, a bad scare before he finally subdued them when a last inning rally fell short by one run and gave Taylor a well deserved triumph. In fine form, Taylor kept his record this season unblemished as he set down his opponents with three hits in five frames. However they did manage to get to him in the second and last for three runs as Marlowe, Burchard, Sievike wielded big bats for the losers.

Davis Scores Three

Davis, Kappa Sig second sacker, was the hero of the win as he personally accounted for three of the total of four scored. Other Kappa Sigma players giving Taylor fine support were Rapson, Brown, and Hoffman. With this win tucked under their belts, the Kappa club boasts the enviable record of four wins and no defeats.

In the other contest going the full time Sigma Chi easily handled the Phi Psi group as Jahn of the winners chucked two-hit ball and allowed only two scores.

The two hits went to Bergstrom and Wilcox and both hits resulted in scores as the boys laid the hickory on the oval. After that one outburst, John was invincible and easily muffled the Phi Psi bats.

Going to work early, the Sigma Chis gave Jahn a three-run margin to work on in the first inning. Then in the fifth and sixth frames they added two more in each to merge victorious. Morrison, Chaloupka, Dam-schen and Baker were the boys who led the Sigma Chi team to victory while Lamb, Frisbie and Fagen were the scrappy clubbers of the Phi Psis who showed well even in defeat.

Postponed Tilts

Three other contests were started after the above two were finished. A wild and woolly battle was started between unbeaten Delta Upsilon and equally effective SAM in what had promise of being the battle royal of the tourney. When of DU and Puziss of the Sammies were locked in a tight pitching duel. The DU boys got to Puziss for four runs in the first frame but he bore down after that and held them scoreless while his mates went

'Hot' Ducks Face Powerful Soldier '9'

Winging along on their longest and fanciest win streak of this season, Oregon's rollicking, frolicking Ducks, currently leading the northern division by a husky one-game margin, turn from the conference channel to challenge one of the toughest service clubs on the coast.

Hobby's grand little gang of competitors travel to Albany Thursday to grapple with the Camp Adair Timber Wolves in what should be a crackerjack of a ball game.

The Timber Wolves claim a tally to work on Wren for two runs in the third.

When this game is completed it might well decide the champion of that particular league.

In the other abbreviated contests Sigma Nu and Theta Chi were locked in a scoreless tie at the end of two innings. Dick of Sigma Nu and Davis of Theta Chi, both fine hurlers were in top condition and were letting down the opponents. Sherr Ross had a commanding lead over Canard club hitting the opposing hurler for eight runs.

ented group, including several ex-professional stars. Jack Knott, a former Philadelphia Athletic chucker, will probably be used on the mound to try and quell the swashbuckling, bat-brandishing Oregonians, who stand as odds-on favorites to cop their third straight ND championship.

While with the A's Knott racked up an impressive win-loss average, and that with a cellar-groveling outfit.

Providing much of the batting punch for the Corvallis khaki-clad diamonders will be Beau Bell, a St. Louis Brown hitting star before being sucked into the service by the draft. Bell, while in the American loop, batted consistently around the .300 mark.

One Game Postponed

This will be the second attempted game between these two clubs, an earlier tilt being washed away by an Oregon cloudburst.

To round out an otherwise already full week of activity, Hob-son's Webfootmen will go to the starting post again on Friday and Saturday.

The first game will be conducted on the Howe field grass against the 383rd infantry team of Camp Adair, a team which twice before felt the wrath of Oregon's hitting fury.

Saturday's tiff, scheduled as part of the Junior weekend festivities, pits the sky-soaring Duck stickers against the Portland University Pilots, also booked for showing on the home lot. In the first series of the year, the wearers of the green and yellow pounded out a pair of impressive wins.

The tilts this weekend will be the last appearance of the Ducks locally until the 1943 finale with Oregon State May 16. Between now and then, however, Oregon will trod a stony path which takes them to Washington State, Idaho, and Washington for six important games.
