

Marching Masked Men Enact Traditional Roles

didates will be required to have .3 points above the women's all-campus average accumulative for their three years of University life.

Activities

Outstanding junior activity men will match, with at least a little anxiety, as the Friars, complete with serious expression and folded arms, wend through the crowd—on the prowl for the top three-year men of the campus. Hoods, traditionally NOT worn up, and the corded monkish belt will distinguish members of the men's senior service honorary. Lead man in the centipede line will carry the customary Friar scroll. A tap on the shoulder will indicate Friar pledging.

Playing a slightly different role this year, will be the surgically-gowned and ominously-masked members of Asklepiads, pre-medic honorary. New pledges, in past years, have been ornamented with a lone suspended from a green ribbon. This year, due to the speeded tempo of medical training, new members were selected in the fall. However, in order that custom will be carried on—and new campus luncheoners will not be cheated of the annual skeleton caravan—the entire Asklepiad membership will be represented.

Snap

It was suggested that snap formation routines might be worked out, utilizing the long ques of the marching honoraries. However, the latest reports from the organizations indicate solemnity, as usual, will be the keynote to pledging.

Isn't it FUN being a college student?

You can wander along the street downtown licking at an ice-cream cone or munching popcorn and no one is amazed . . . In fact, they rather expect it.

Or you can dress yourself in curious costumes and peculiar accessories, but nobody turns around, partly because you are a college student, and partly because all other college students are doing the same thing.

The long hours of perching in some coffee house with your only worry whether or not you're really going to arrive at class on time is a privilege that is exclusively collegiate.

At what other point of your career can you sleep late on Saturday mornings . . . go to concerts free . . . spend all of a spring afternoon in the middle of the week acquiring a tan . . . or be part of a group which has the same ideals, interests, and attitudes as yours . . . Exactly . . . you can't and don't.

Ho hum, it's wonderful to be a college student. No wonder the seniors are getting more and more wistful as the year comes closer to its end. . . .

Age of Chivalry Note from DEPARTMENT OF UTTER CONFUSION:

Two absent-minded coeds pothered off the curb into the middle of Thirteenth yesterday morning, placidly yawning at the car that was about to run them down. The driver peered over the top of the steering wheel and shook his finger at them in a "Naughty, Naughty!" manner, then sailed loftily up the street.

nivorous as they look. Take me, for instance. You can imagine? Listen, big, stuffed, and snooty, who do you think you are, the ghost of J. P. Morgan? . . . What's my draft number? Wouldn't you like to know! Sure I'd like to go out. Do you think I crochet afghans for the fun of it? What time'll I pick you up? Eight, okay. Sure I got a C-card. I didn't take printing two terms for nothing."

Gee, girls, I got a date. All I have to supply is the car, cokes, radio, heater, show, and the proper attitude. Oh and what a man. Big, brawny. Who do I know? We've been tracking him for days. A pin and uniform both. Heaven in a Manhattan shirt, that's him.

Who is he? Oh he's the state game warden.
