

Helen Angell, Ex-Editor Returns to Visit Campus

Springtime on the Oregon campus seems the same as before except for so many strange faces, thinks Helen Angell, last year's Emerald editor, who arrived on the campus Thursday noon to spend part of her month's vacation from work on the Reader's Digest.

Her life in Pleasantville, a suburb of New York city seems entirely different from school to Miss Angell, who was a member of Kappa, Phi Theta Upsilon, and Mortar Board while she was here.

Her work on the editorial staff of the world's largest magazine includes coverage of magazines and books, condensing articles, helping edit the speech department, and other work connected with the editing of other phases of the Digest.

Not as Easy

Miss Angell doesn't think the people in the east have it quite as easy, in regard to wartime rationing, as the westerners do. She explained, "People are allowed only one and a half gallons of gas per week, and until recently there was no pleasure driving allowed at all. "The people are especially war conscious, and as for service men, New York and surrounding places are crowded with them."

Regret

One of her regrets is that she can't see the "Great White Way" and all the brilliance of the city lights at night.

"Would you like to hear about our reunion?" she continued, referring to a "get-together" which she and several other Oregon alumnae enjoyed recently.

"Janet Morris; Elizabeth Steed, 1942 AWS president; Ruth Hall, 1942 panhellenic president; Betty Plankington, Peggy Smith, and I met in the middle of Times Square and had dinner together and then went to the theater."

All five of these girls are either doing graduate work at colleges in the east or else are employed near New York.

Ames Installed As ASUO Prexy

As ASUO and executive council officers for the 1943-44 school year repeated their oath of office after Robert S. Farrell, secretary of state, in an all-campus assembly Thursday morning, Nancy Ames, victorious candidate in the recent election, became the first woman student body president since the last world war.

Preceding the installation of officers Phi Theta Upsilon, junior women's honorary, tapped 29 sophomore women for membership. The white carnation and black and white pledge ribbons of the organization were presented to Betty Bevil, Joanne Dolph, Kathryn Dunn, Jenelyn Gaston, Alva Granquist, Marion Harris, Phyllis Horstman, Ardis Jensen, Edith Newton, Adele Riggs, Marian Schaefer, Jean Taylor, Marjorie Young.

Bonnie Umphlette, Peggy Wright, Connie Fullmer, Florence Hamilton, Gerd Hansen, Audrey Holliday, Ruth Van Buskirk, Marty Beard, Arliss Boone, Jean Fitzgerald, Alyson Hales, Mary Riley, Sally Spies, Barbara Younger, and Carolyn Wicke.

Secretary of State Farrell congratulated the new officers and wished them luck in their coming year of work.

senior in business administration, is the outgoing president of the board. Serving with Vandeneinde were Jim Thayer, sophomore in journalism, vice-president; Uly Dorais, sophomore in business administration, secretary; Les Anderson, and Roy Seeborg. Oge Young was appointed to fill the vacancy created when Uly Dorais left for the army. J. H. Gilbert, dean of the college of liberal arts, and O. J. Hollis, acting dean of the law school, were the faculty members of the board.
