

Women Have Housing Study

With the dormitories being turned over to the army to house the trainees when they arrive, the University administration is giving consideration to the finding of adequate quarters for women, according to Dr. Donald M. Erb, president of the University.

There should be no fear for adequate housing for women as several fraternity houses will be available for use next fall and some sororities will be used. Dr. Erb pointed out that comfortable quarters will be furnished for women on a par with the halls now being used.

Girls will have house mothers and all the facilities of the vacated halls. Alumni representatives in charge of fraternity properties will meet next week to determine the effect of the war upon campus housing.

Larsen Says

(Continued from page two) mainly been a concern of student leaders. Only to the extent that individual students are directly effected do they keep tuned for action. Athletics, Oregon, Emerald, and social events are sore spots. War necessities have a peculiar way of modifying student rights, if not nullifying them. There is a danger, but not as big as some people seem to think.

Fortunate

The outcome of the campaign just ended may be fortunate when the future of student government is considered. It has resulted in a campus-wide awakening to the actual power of votes in politics. The election results for next year are not in any sense certain. Greek houses no longer have to vote as "recommended."

Independents now know that their votes do count.

Also, the novelty of a woman ASUO president will create additional interest, if for no other reason, because the idea is not likely to be restricted to one house.

For the House

Basic to all reasons for participation in activities is personal prestige, improvement, and social position. And behind the mechanism of student government is the desire of living organizations to "push" members for the "sake of the house."

Commonly attributed to women is an idealism that may give a healthy direction to post war politics. Better politics in the way of freer individual voting or in unexpected political arrangements may easily result. Closely organized favoritism which has characterized Oregon politics may have weakened. All will depend on how students choose to use their votes.

Fear for the continued existence of hard won student rights may well be laid aside when it is realized that there are new reasons for interest in student government, and that the ever-existing personal and social motives will continue.

Bad Taste

The kitchen-politician Has his hands in many dishes And he juggles groups and factions To realize his wishes.

He's a smart boy and a leader Of the voters, who, like leeches Gather round his kitchen table To hear him make his speeches.

And they cheer the broth he cooks As he prepares the final coup; Hoping they will get a handout Of his gravy-laden soup.

And he hardly ever fails them 'Cause he cannot stop his itchin' For the votes they trade for gravy In his modern, campus kitchen.

At that, the election was a lot of good clean fun compared to some we've had. Death was threatened only once to our knowledge, and the situation never got quite to the swearing out of warrants stage, although cop-calling was threatened a number of times both on the campus and out route 99 a ways. Just a bunch of big, healthy, clean-living, high-minded, straight-laced American youths having an election.

And the lads who got in on the free beer wish we would have one every week.
