

LIEUTENANT ROBERT G. DAVIS . . .

. . . stands at the head of a section of foreign area and language students who have just completed a drill session on the old University ROTC field. Soldier-students have the opportunity to learn methods of command under the direction of Lt. Davis, as they are all potential officers. Regular members of the peace time ROTC staff of the University are cooperating in the new training program.

Pre-mets Total 230

There are 230 pre-meteorology students living and working on the University campus. Their unit, housed in Hendricks hall, was one of the last meteorology schools opened by the Army Air Force Technical Training Command and is under the direct command of Lieutenant Charles D. Cable.

The personnel of the unit has been divided into eight flights or groups of approximately 30 men. Commanding the flights are student officers aided by assistant flight leaders. These men are responsible for marching the flights to and from classes, maintaining order during study periods, and carrying out the orders from the commanding officers.

Sixty-two hours per week are now devoted to academic and military drill and exercise. The academic program has been divided into five primary divisions: mathematics, mechanics, physics, English and history, and geography.

The entire program has been coordinated with view to producing men with sound academic backgrounds, preparatory to making them Army Air Corps meteorology officers. The full training course will take approximately seventeen months from start to commission and the men of the University of Oregon detachment have completed four of the twelve months to be spent on the campus.

Gustavus Adolphus college library will get $100,000 this year from the Augustana synod centennial thank offering.

Name Wanted by Soldier Band

Can you think of a good name for a band? Although the soldier-students at the University have started what promises to be a very good orchestra, it lacks just one thing—a name. Anyone who has a suggestion should call the Emerald or bring it in to the Emerald. The name chosen will be published in the Emerald on October 12 with the name of the person submitting it.

The band will be made up of about 13 or 14 pre-meteorology and engineer students and will include many prominent musicians from such bands as those of Jack Teagarden, Tommy Tucker, and Art Jarrett. Leader of the band is Owen Bailey and Bud Pence is manager and promoter. First debut of the orchestra will be October 16.

Daffy-Nitions

SNAFU is the army character whose unhappy adventures are a combination of Little Lulu, Joe Doaks, Mrs. Pruneface, Simp O'Dill, and Fish Blotto. In other words he is a goof-off. A G.I. is quite the opposite. He always carries a clean handkerchief and stuff and leans over backwards to carry out every, order to the minute detail much to his superior's chagrin.

An eager-beaver is a real go-getter, always on-the-beam. He enjoys doing things the hard way. The Ready Teddy and the Rewin' Bruin are similar animals who invariably famous firsts in something or other. No matter which type your acquaintances fall into, they all have to be in at 10:30 p.m. (Pre-Mets at 10:10.)

In the last three months, the coeds and local girls have started a very pleasant practice of seeing that the fellows get in on time. Some even see their dates to the door. Let's hope this becomes a tradition because a soldier who misses bed-check is not only subject to military discipline, but a night's sleep is necessary if he intends to keep up with the stream-lined army schedule.

Aesthetics Class Omitted From Book

Because of an oversight, a class in aesthetics was not listed in the 1943-44 class schedule book, the psychology department announced today.

The class, Aesthetics 421, will be held in the office of Dr. B. E. Jessup, assistant professor of English and aesthetics, who is the instructor in the course. Time of the class will be arranged later.

The University of Michigan's physical hardening program is compulsory for all men students.

Basics In Training

Soldier-students, that's what we are. Most of us are young college fellows who were lucky enough to be selected for special training in the nation's colleges. Our course here at the University of Oregon is basic engineering.

All of us are studying mathematics, chemistry, and physics as basic knowledge for any future branch of engineering.

Our Uncle Sam isn't letting us off with merely a technical training, though. He has arranged that we spend plenty of time learning our American background through a study of history and geography. He thinks of us with thoughts of our becoming officers. Thus, we are well-schooled in English rhetoric and speech.

But even with the high plane towards which we are being pointed always in mind, our educators have not forgotten that we are soldiers of the United States Army. That's the reason behind our six hours weekly of both military science and physical education.

The University students have found campus traffic rather trying. Their main objection has been the several sections marching to and from classes—and the army has priority. We have been divided into sections for ease in moving between classes. Section leaders are chosen to march their men and keep the records of attendance.

The reveille formation at six-ten o'clock each morning is run by cadet officers who change jobs each week. Squad corporals call roll and report to the platoon sergeant who in turn reports to the cadet first sergeant. After assigning the platoons for policing the area, the cadet first sergeant gives the list of men absent from reveille to the company cadet commander, who checks with the orderly room.

The cadet commander also forms the company to move out to classes and is in charge of the company for inspection of ranks.

Also in the roster detail is the assigning of men to act as charges of quarters. The pleasant detail of making the immediately-after-taps bed check falls to the individual who, for one week, has been assigned the position of charge of quarters on his floor.

On this bed check deal, we often hear the question, when we have a coed out for an evening, "What are your closing hours, soldier?" Answering that, may

Area Men New Here

Classes in the Army's Foreign Area and Language program at the University began September 13. In the unit here are 225 soldiers studying language, sociology, history, geography and other vital information of the nation which they are specializing. The fellows are becoming so engrossed in their work that they often practice the famed "Duce Retreat" every Saturday after 3 o'clock formation. Their courses cover the curiosities and customs of Spain, Portugal, Italy, Russia, and Norway.

The "Furriners" are quick to inform any inquisitive person that, though they are quartered in the former women's dorm, Susan Campbell hall, they are definitely not affected by their environment. They look forward with no discomfort to the hard winters rumored of Oregon; you see, the FAL men eat all meals at John Straub hall and the walk may be anything but the greatest comfort.

Commanding company C of ASTU 3920, which is the official designation of the FAL men, is Lieutenant Dwight H. Near. Acting first sergeant is Corporal W. E. Dale. The men themselves represent nearly every branch of Army and are of an older age group than the pre-engineers who have been on the campus longer than this new company of the unit.

we state that the company buglers blow taps at ten-thirty o'clock every night except Saturday.

Colonel C. L. Sampson, University commandant and professor of military science and tactics, will be retired from active service on September 30 concluding a career in the army since the Spanish-American war. The official announcement came from the office of the ninth ser command.
