

Programs in Five Extension Courses Offered This Term

W. G. Beattie, assistant director of the general extension division, announced last week that five extension courses will be offered this fall. Classes to be offered include two Spanish courses and courses in social education, interior design, and regional planning.

All classes will meet from 7:15 to 9:15 in the evening. Fall term began on Monday, October 4, with classes in social education, which carries two hours of graduate credit and has H. E. Stevens as instructor. It meets in 107 Commerce building on the campus. Conversational Spanish, a non-credit course for beginners, is taught by Marion H. Wright in 106 Commerce.

Tuesday, October 5, the first class in interior design elements will meet under Brownell Frasier in 107 architecture building. Mrs. Wright will teach an advanced section of conversational Spanish Wednesday in 106 commerce, and A. L. Lomax will teach regional planning in commerce and industry in 107 Commerce Thursday.

The fees are: $2.50 per credit hour for undergraduate credit, $3 per credit hour for graduate credit, and $2 per hour for non-credit work. A course in geography, probably "Source Materials and Laboratory Techniques" may be offered if enough interest is shown. Further information about extension classes may be obtained by calling 3300, extension 325, or at the extension division office on the campus.

Museum Receives 92 Rare Indian Baskets

The museum of natural history of the Oregon State Museum of Anthropology was presented with 92 Indian baskets and other artifacts by Mrs. Genevieve Smith, Portland.

They were collected in Alaska, British Columbia, Washington, Arizona, and California. The collection will be known as the Mrs. D. P. Thompson memorial collection in honor of Mrs. Smith's mother, a member of an early Oregon pioneer family, according to an announcement made by L. S. Cressman, director of the museum of natural history.

University of Texas food engineers are working on plans for cooking and drying carrots, according to similar processes followed for sweet potatoes.
