

Former Emerald Head Writes For 'The American Scholar'

The current number of "The American Scholar," Phi Beta Kappa's national quarterly, is of more than usual interest at the University of Oregon. One of its most interesting articles, "A Westerner Views the U.S.A." was contributed by Edward M. Miller, assistant managing editor of the Oregonian, who was editor of the Emerald in 1925-26.

Last year Mr. Miller was Oregon's first graduate student at Harvard under the Numan fellowship for active newspapermen, and it was during his stay there that he wrote his illuminating evaluation of Americans north, south, east, and west.

Another contributor to the quarterly is Dr. J. C. Knode, of the University of New Mexico, well known to the Oregon faculty through several summers of teaching at Portland and on the Eugene campus. His article, "Virtue and Talents," is a discussion of trends in the American philosophy.

This first number under the editorship of Dr. Marjorie Hope Nicolson of Columbia university, national president of Columbia university, has an imposing array of material in fields of foreign relations, world politics, literary criticism, psychology and psychiatry, history and biography, music and mathematics. In last year's eight-page Emerald these would have been discussed in some detail; this year's paper has but four pages.

Council Plans G. I. Recreation

Recreation plans for the soldiers advanced another step at the meeting of the war emergency council at Westminster house last night. A committee, composed of A. F. Holmer, council secretary, and Barbara Younger, of the campus coordinating committee, was appointed to take an inventory of the town's resources offering recreation along any line of interest to the men.

The group will then work out a schedule, compatible to both army and Eugene residents.

Various events will also be planned for Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays to help entertain.

Dr. Wesley G. Nicholson, minister of the Congregational church, is in charge of a personal counseling committee, which will offer a chaplains' consultation service. A room will be opened in both Hendricks and John Straub hall from 5 to 6 each Tuesday and Thursday. Nine religious groups will be represented, and the entire service will be interdenominational.

Others present at the meeting were Eleanor Scott of the Student Christian council and Dr. Quirinus Breen, presiding.

Dream Girl

Pictures of all the candidates will be taken and placed in the College Side Inn and at the Co-op book store. Six finalists will be elected from the group, and the winner will be announced at the Capers in Gerlinger hall.

A pin-up picture of the Dream Girl will be sent to all Oregon students now in the armed services, Gerd Hansen stated.

Texas alone expects to send 324 nurses a year to the armed forces.

Red Cross Girls To Refresh Skill

Former Red Cross instructors will have an opportunity to brush up on bandage rolling Thursday afternoon at a refresher course sponsored by the Red Cross committee of the campus war board.

The meeting will be held from 3 to 6 p.m. on the third floor of Gerlinger in the room opposite the Panhellenic office, Carol Wicke, chairman of the committee, said.

Girls must wear white uniforms and white organdy veils with the Red Cross insignia, Miss Wicke stated, and they should plan to spend at least two hours.

The women's physical education club donated their clubroom for the meeting.

Speech Clinic Classes Begin Tonight at 7

Any person with a speech defect, such as stuttering or stammering, may enroll in the class offered by the speech clinic of the University of Oregon, according to Kenneth S. Wood, speech pathologist and director of the clinic. Classes will be held once a week from 7 to 9:30 in room 107 Friendly hall beginning this Wednesday.

Enrollees in the class must be 15 years or older. People who have other defects, such as lisping, cluttering, or sound substitutions are requested to contact Wood for an individual remedial program.

If any of the students cannot attend class meetings on Wednesday nights, Wood said a change in time could be arranged.

Monograph Written By Dr. B. E. Jessup

Dr. Bertram E. Jessup, assistant professor of English and aesthetics, has written a monograph in philosophy entitled "Relational Value Meanings."

Dr. H. G. Townsend, head of the philosophy department, predicted wide praise for the book, saying that "the author's thought is clearly expressed in pure, economical prose suited to the purpose of revealing the subtle and complex features of our value experiences."

First dean of men in America was Thomas Arkle Clark of the University of Illinois.
