

Greek Audience Deemed Sensible

By WILMA FOSTER

Homer presented his poems before learned and well-informed audiences, was the conclusion drawn by Dr. F. M. Combella, professor of Greek and Latin, in the second faculty lecture of the term.

Evidence of this is shown in Homer's illusive references to what must be well-known events. In addition many poets preceded him and the audience undoubtedly was one who not only knew the outline but some of the details.

Another evidence is his use of foreshadowing coming events which some believe to be a means he used to bring out interest. Dr. Combella pointed out that in the case of Hephistopheles, there would be no such interested created because he had barely been mentioned previous to the interesting arousing statement.

Another argument he brought out was whether the use of traditional material instead of original stories detracts from his greatness. He believes it adds to it because he selected what he wanted and expanded, organized and emphasized what he chose in an expert manner.

One must either accept the details as having artistic purpose or abandon the fact that references were made for effect, he said.

Lt. Anderson entered the Officers' Candidate school at Fort Benning, Georgia, four months ago. He was inducted into the army in August, 1943 and held the rank of corporal before being commissioned.

"Learning is a thrill," he continued. "Actual tastes of higher learning will take the boredom out of life. It is like an art; the joy and learning comes from seeing something big, and wanting to do it."

Dr. Breen reminded the forum group that this was a state university, founded by the state to be responsible for knowledge in the state of Oregon. He gave the three aims in higher education: 1. to preserve knowledge; 2. to augment or increase learning; 3. to communicate knowledge to others.

Owen Bailey's swing band will play at 2 p. m. preceding the Sunday game between the Florence
