(Continued from page three) living organizations are well represented in numbers, because all houses have an equal chance of being represented by a candidate or two.

On arriving for the assembly girls should first call for their eligibility cards at the boxes containing last name initials—before they will be allowed to vote.

Jerry Bercovitz Leaves School to Recover

In order to recuperate at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Bercovitz, in Portland, Jerry Bercovitz left the infirmary Sunday. Bercovitz had been confined there since becoming ill with pneumonia on January 10.

Last term he was a freshman in music, an Emerald staff member, and a member of the UO symphony orchestra. He withdrew his winter registration after becoming ill. Asked about the possibility of returning, Bercovitz said: "I would like to come back to Oregon, but that depends on how fast I completely recover."

Monday morning found one civilian, Dorothy McLane, and nine soldier students remaining in the infirmary. The GI's are: George Reihmer, Robert Stotlar, Lowell Meyer, Howard Bevins, Eugene Little, David McDonald, Albert Long, Carroll LaManna, and Ray Kelch.

Giving Faith to Others Important Aim for Writers, Says Authoress

The writer who gives faith to people will have done a wonderful and marvelous thing, Mrs. E. H. Hedrick, Oregon authoress, told guests at the 12th annual Matrix table Friday night. In every civilization there is a crucial time in which man begins to analyze the worth of that civilization and wonder if it is worthwhile. It is at that time that authors should do their utmost to preserve faith in the people.

She also urged that young writers take their inspiration from America and not copy the defeatism of Europe as was done in the last war.

At a gathering of members of Theta Sigma Phi, national women's journalism honorary, and Pot and Quill, writing honorary, after the banquet Mrs. Hedrick said that writers do their best work when writing something they know well from their own experience.

Her first story was published in the Saturday Evening Post, "after I had completely given up hope."

Mrs. Emma C. McKinney, publisher of the Hillsboro Argus, who will celebrate her fortieth anniversary as publisher in April, was presented with a scroll in recognition of her learning and distinction in newspaper work. Mrs. McKinney started her work in journalism when 17 years old and returned to this work in 1900 after the death of her husband.

She told the assembled journalists and women outstanding in creative arts that she envied them for living in an era when women occupied every position. "When I was a girl, the only occupations were dressmaking, clerking and millinery. Now men do some of the millinery."

She also said that she envied them for their school of journalism. "When I started I don't think the word journalism was in my vocabulary. What I learned, I learned the hard way. I learned to set type by hand. I also learned to be pressman and do various other things about the shop, and I even learned to run a linotype."—which vocation she suggested to young women of today, saying that anyone who knew how to type could learn to run a linotype.

Marie Rogndahl, popular soprano, sang "Ave Maria," and "Caro Nome" from Verdi's opera Rigoletto. She was accompanied by Ruth Baker.
