

Library Functions Described to Class

The library functions for the students of the University of Oregon, and there are various departments where reference and recreational books may be obtained, reports Miss Krieg, head librarian.

At the right of the entrance near Kincaid street is the reference room where one can find various dictionaries, encyclopedias, periodicals, telephone directories, a book review digest, a New York Times index, and all types of reference books. Students are not allowed to take these books out of the reference room.

Students can locate their books by looking them up in the card catalogue room off the circulation department. All books are filed according to author, title, and subject. After locating the card with information concerning your book, record the number of the book and the department and then attempt to locate it. If you have any trouble, one of the librarians will be glad to help you. In this room are also found Emerald, Oregonian, and Library of Congress indices.

The circulation department, headed by Miss Rise, is one of the most extensive departments of the library. It has several exhibits on display each month. Right now, there are exhibits pertaining to National Dog week; Latin, Buddhist, and Persian manuscripts; and a model of a ship built in 1854.

Miss Rise encourages supplementary and recreational reading. There are six floors of books, 350,000, in the stack room that people do not know about. There is a rental shelf where best sellers may be had for ten cents a week or two cents a day. Non-fiction books may be taken out for seven days, but not renewed. Other books may be kept out for a month and renewed if no reserve is filed; the fine is five cents a day and no telephone renewals are accepted.

The browsing room, now open from 1:30 to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, will probably be open evenings, Saturday and Sunday as soon as the four organizations sponsoring it arrange their schedules. Concerts, readings, book reviews, and maybe a Hallowe'en party will be held there.

There are 75 desks in the stack room available for graduate students. Graduates are allowed to keep books on their desks throughout the school year, after checking them out.

The reserve room is at the extreme left of the entrance near Kincaid street. There students may take out books for two-hour periods starting on the hour; books may be renewed if no reserve is filed. The student must know the author and title of the book he wishes, and must have a library card. Books may be checked out overnight, half an hour before closing time; they are due on the opening hour. Reserves may be filed during the day for overnight use.

The newspaper room is located in the basement. The London Times, The Emerald, the San Francisco Chronicle, the Chicago News, the Christian Science Monitor, and almost any other large daily, and all Oregon dailies may be found there.

Collections of particular information are found on the second floor. The Oregon collection consists of books by Oregon authors; books about the University, students and faculty; and pictures of early days at the University. A graduate study room and two smoking porches are also on the second floor.

Fish is not a brain food, and no amount of mackerel eating will improve your mentality.

AUW Plans Fall Meeting

The Eugene branch of the Association of University Women has been invited to the twelfth annual meeting of the AUW. The meeting will be at luncheon on Thursday, October 26, in the Hotel Benson Rose room, Portland.

Rare and precious articles such as nylon hose, bobby pins, and cleansing tissue were auctioned off during intermissions at the recent student war bond show at Louisiana State university. Proceeds were converted into war bonds and donated to the students-in-service scholarship fund.

Dr. William B. Herms, professor of parasitology and head of the division of entomology and parasitology at the University of California, has been made a lieutenant colonel in the army sanitary corps.

Clips and Comments

Clock-Wise

Then there was the story about the group of pledges who were tired of the monotony of having to be on study table while their elders were enjoying unrestricted freedom. One night after collecting all the alarm clocks, they hid them in strategic places, but not before setting each clock to go off at 15-minute intervals throughout the evening. While timepieces screeched at the top of their springs, upperclassmen and dates crawled around on hands and knees—looking—looking—

Mrs. Bricker made a short speech, scrupulously avoiding to enter into partisan rushing, but unable to keep her voice untinged of Kappa calm and bearing.

The governor then introduced several state figures, waved, enunciated a parting sentence, and went inside the car.

What Now?

Meanwhile, in a camouflaged clearing atop Skinner's butte a little group of white-clad figures had been working feverishly with a massive set of Mars-ian apparatus, twisting dials, whispering calculations into the horned trumpet mouthpieces of their headphones. A tall figure who seemed to be in command was surveying the station platform with high-powered binoculars.

Two white Wac-like figures were peering intently into a horizontal tube-shaped instrument, also pointed stationward—one at each end. They were muttering numbers into the headphones in low, confident whispers—48—46—45—43.8—milmeters west—check. From a figure at a tripod plotting table—43.8 "CHECK." A whoop of jubilation went up from the group—backslapping—smiles!!

They had found the Life photographer!

A report of his exact position was radioed to each rally squad member on the platform. The message received, each pair of rally eyes swung to the objective, clicked into permanent position, remained on target.

Atop the butte the tall figure with the binoculars surveyed his squad, noticed one pair of eyes—chestnut brown—offbeam on a white-haired man nearby. His brow furrowed, orders barked thru his headphone—ON TARGET THERE! The chestnut brown eyelashes fluttered—got back on the beam. "That's better," barked the leader—then turned on heel, and resumed his munching on his black market almond Hershey.
