Dean Hazel Schwering Dead

Hazel Schwering's Monument Found In Girls' Lives Says Orlando Hollis

Those of us who have been associated with Dean Hazel P. Schwering know how bravely she has carried on her work through long periods of poor health. There was no word of complaint, no apparent change in her buoyant spirit.

Dean Schwering loved and understood young people. Although she gave unsparingly of her time and energy, she gave one the impression that her work was something which she thoroughly enjoyed doing. Anything that appeared to be for the best interests of her "girls" commanded the dean's immediate interest and attention.

She was a person of unusual abilities and broad interests. Everyone was impressed with her charm, poise, and gracious manners. Thousands of young women have been influenced by Dean Schwering's wise counsel, her warm personality, and her sterling character. In the lives of these young women will be found Hazel Schwering's true monument.

ORLANDO JOHN HOLLIS
Acting President
University of Oregon

The death of Dean Schwering in the prime of life and service is a real tragedy. She was widely known and admired as an able and popular dean of women, as well as for her interest and leadership in others fields, among them AAUW, Girl Scouts, and her own sorority in which she was national vocational counselor. Her blithe personality and zest for living, her contagious appreciation of all that is fine and beautiful, added much to life on the campus and in the community. She and Dr. Schwering made their home a gay meeting place for their host of friends, young and old. They both will be greatly missed.

KARL W. ONTHANK
Director of Personnel

In the passing of Dean Schwering the state has lost a real supporter of University ideals, the faculty of the University a cooperative and loyal colleague, and every student a friend.

The University has suffered a tragic loss in the death of Dean Schwering. Women students, in part, have keenly felt the lack of her presence; for her dynamic personality provided inspiration for all who knew her. A friend to all and beloved by all, she was a gracious, lovely lady who lived a life of service. The memory of Dean Schwering will guide us still, for it is the idea of such good that is everlasting.

AUDREY HOLLIDAY

Dean Schwering's death is a great loss to the University; she was doing a great service and will be remembered for years to come.

PHYLLIS HORSTMAN
ASUO Vice-President

Dean Schwering was a wonderful friend and adviser, and her loss will be irreparable. It will seem strange to go into her office and not find her there. She was interested not only in all groups, but in each girl.
