

Duck Tracks

By WALLY ADAMS

The Webfoots' last four games are convincing evidence that it doesn't take long for things to happen thick and fast around the Northern division.

Three weeks ago the Ducks had a seemingly secure two-game lead over their nearest rivals. Not counting last night's game as this was written before game time, the Ducks now have their back to the wall and are faced with the prospect of winning every game or else. Of course the other teams (OSC and WSC) are faced with the same situation, but Oregon or Oregon State are sore to eliminate one or the other in their clash March 3.

All of which strengthens the theory that the Northern division, Pacific coast conference league, is one of the toughest in the nation and can match baskets with anyone.

They haven't fared badly in national ratings either. During the past six years since the NCAA tournament to pick the national championship team has been in action, the northwest has won once, and taken second twice.

West Takes the Lead

Oregon walked off with first place honors in 1939 when the great "Alleycats" teams was wearing the Lemon and Green. In 1940 and 1941 the Washington State Cougars took second place honors.

The dope book goes a little further and lends itself to the fact that teams from the West play a better brand of ball than the East.

The West has captured top honors for the past three years. Stanford in 1942, Wyoming in 1943, and Utah last year were all crowned as the top team in the country.

Perhaps this year will prove us wrong, and the East will turn out the powerhouse club, but don't count the Northwest out until the tourney at Kansas City is played next month.

rapid order the rest of the squad poured in shots from all angles.

The Vandals staged a brief flurry of points themselves in the closing minutes of the half and brought the score to a 15-point margin at 34-19.

Both teams cooled off during the second period, although Idaho managed to cut down their defect to 11 points when the final gun went off. Leonard Pyne for the Vandals and Ken Hays both hit the basket freely in the last half with Pyne garnering 10, and Hays 9 counters.

After graduation he worked on the La Grande Observer and later for the United Press in Portland, Salt Lake City, Utah, and Great Falls, Montana. The lieutenant has been stationed in Alaska since his enlistment in the signal corps and returned to the United States last summer.

Emerald Reunion

Returning to the journalism building, Lt. Mattingly has found his former journalism professor, George Turnbull, occupying the desk of the late Dean Eric W. Allen as acting dean. Martha Stevart Berretoni, women's page editor under Mattingly, is also back on the campus as secretary to Turnbull. Bud Jermain, who worked as a reporter under Mattingly and later, in 1939-40, became editor-in-chief, is another Emeraldite counted among those present, returning last fall to become a graduate instructor in journalism.
