Modern Greek Baffled

Women" is where she is told that the Greeks demand the death of her infant son.

Last winter term, Kay played Judith, the leading feminine role in "Dark Victory," her only other Guild hall appearance. She has formerly done work in the Very Little theater in Eugene and is senior representative on the advisory board of the University theater.

"Can you imagine any mother naming her child Astyanax?" groaned Kay, still concerned.

An unusual battalion of the schools-at-war field army has been organized at Stephens college in Columbia, Mo. A girl who sells or purchases a war bond will have her picture placed beside that of the man in the armed services whom she is honoring with her purchases.

in Germany are now benefiting from this Red Cross service.

Major Fred Hammond, Jr., a former University student, writes from England, "I left the U. S. on Christmas day and landed in England sometime thereafter. I had quite a pleasant surprise when we landed. One of the Red Cross gals who served coffee and doughnuts was Mary E. Terrin, a Portland and University of Oregon gal, class of '33." The American Red Cross is at our fighting man's side from the time he enters the service until he has been started on the road of readjustment after discharge.

Phyllis Donovan urges that students make their contributions in the light of the fact that, because of the enlargement of its field of activity, the American Red Cross will need 25 per cent more funds this year than last and that the goal must be met if we are to "keep the Red Cross at his side."

Kerensky Traces Russian

"For the revolution to come during the war with Germany was a mistake," he said. "It was dangerous to overthrow the Romanoff regime during a war so decisive for the future of Russia."

The Bolsheviks did not create the revolution, he pointed out. It was a movement of the peasants to gain freedom.

"The feelings and spirit of the Russian people have not been killed after 20 years of communism," Kerensky continued. "After this war the world will see new extraordinary events in Russia. To realize that they still dream of freedom makes the outlook for all peoples of the world more optimistic."

Russia in Asia

In his address on "Russia in Asia," Kerensky expressed the opinion that it would be a tremendous catastrophe for mankind if Russia would try to become more imperialistic than she is now.

"I am not in on the secrets of the Kremlin gods," he said, but he added that he thought it was inevitable that the Soviet Union will turn her army, navy, and air force fire on Japan after the defeat of Germany. Russia will fight Japan because she has blockaded Russia seaports on the Pacific which are essential to the development of Siberia and to Russian foreign trade. Russia, he said, is not interested in the South Pacific but Moscow will almost certainly demand the restoration of certain railroad and seaport concessions in China and elsewhere.

He explained the complex relations between Russia and other Asiatic countries during the past two centuries and cited facts indicating that Russia and the United States have been friendly for scores of years.

... giving the good word in South Africa

Have a Coke is a simple gesture of good will that lets people know you wish them well. In Capetown, as in Columbus or Concord, Coca-Cola turns refreshment time into friendship time,—has become a symbol of good feeling among friendly-minded folks.
