Answer Depends On Manpower

By MARGUERITE WITTEW

"We're willing to play football anytime, if and when we can get the manpower to field a team," Anse Cornell, University athletic manager, said Tuesday in response to requests from students aroused by the recent announcements that Oregon State college, Washington State college and the University of Idaho were replacing football on their 1945-46 athletic program. The University of California, University of Southern California, UCLA, and the University of Washington are continuing football, which due to the presence of navy trainees on their campuses, was not interrupted by the war.

Beginning today with the publication of a questionnaire to be filled out by all prospective football players, the Emerald is launching a survey of athletic manpower on the campus and a campaign to urge Oregon men to turn out for football next fall.

Campus interest in football has been high and when the athletic board found it necessary to drop intercollegiate football due to the wartime manpower shortage protests from students who did not fully understand the situation were numerous. Now, with the possibility of football returning in view, the chief obstacle to fielding a team next fall is still the problem of finding suitable material for the coaches to work with.

When the army specialized training program sent several hundred men to this campus, a team was built up and the games played with visiting GI teams were enthusiastically supported by the campus. These games, however, did not draw much interest from townspeople.

The Beavers declared recently that they were determined to play football, regardless of the decisions of other schools in the conference, even if OSC would have to confine their playing to intramural scuffling. According to Cornell, the attendance at intramural games at the University would not warrant training a team and the wear and tear on athletic equipment.

If the varsity board can be convinced that there will be enough men on the campus next fall to warrant a $50,000 expense budget for football, chances are that Hayward field will again break out in pre-war crowds, colors, and excitement. Football depends on Oregon men. The Emerald survey is an attempt to estimate the number and potentialities of men Cornell and the athletic board can count on.

Several new ideas have been added to the program, Miss Cady said today. ## Singer's Clear Diction Lauded

By BETTY JANE BENNETT

Outstandingly clear diction and precise tone were the outstanding features of the vocal recital given by Marilyn Miller, soprano, in the music school auditorium Tuesday evening. Miss Miller's accomplished treatment of her classic group was especially noticeable in "Care Selve" by Handel, and Mozart's "Voi, che Sapete." The former carried an almost reverent feeling through its ease of presentation and flowing lines. The Mozart aria was equally free.

The Schumann group, opening with "Im Wunderschönen Monat Mai" again combined excellent diction and an easy, relaxed style. Though lacking somewhat in volume and power, Miss Miller's performance was a polished one; she carefully attended to the details of her songs—the phrasing and dynamics. Outstanding in this group was "Sonntags am Rhein." Her stage presence was excellent, as the audience felt she was singing to them individually.

Interpretation Accurate

Miss Miller's interpretation of the whimsical "Over the Rim of the Moon" by Michael Head was sung simply but with accuracy. "A Blackbird Singing" and "Nocturne" of this song cycle were outstanding. The soprano displayed excellent high notes in Branscombe's "The Morning Wind" although cer-
