

KOAC News Director To Discuss Conference

Students and townspeople tonight will take "A Trip Through the United Nations Conference with the Press and Radio," as James M. Morris, director of the KOAC school of the air, speaks at 7:30 p.m. in 207 Chapman hall. Morris recently returned from covering the opening work of the UNCIO.

In San Francisco he was able to attend the mass press and radio conferences where key delegates gave inside pictures of such international figures as Anthony Eden, T. V. Soong, Molotov, and Stettinius.

Brother of Dean V. P. Morris, the radio man will be presented under the auspices of the journalism senior editing class.

Mr. Morris gave a convocation address on the San Francisco conference at Oregon State college last week, and on Tuesday, February 15, he addressed the class in problems of war and peace on this campus. Those who have heard him speak on this topic are recommended attendance at Chapman hall tonight.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris will be the dinner guests of the senior editing class at dinner at the Anchorage this evening.

Historic Book Given To Libe

Intended as a gift to the University of Oregon library, a copy of the official resolution of the Latin American countries of the establishment of a general international organization has been received here by Elizabeth DeCou, sophomore in liberal arts.

Documented in March just after the Inter-American conference on problems of war and peace held in Mexico City at that time (the Chapultepec conference), this copy is printed in English and was sent by Lic. Rafael Grisi Q., an official in the Mexican foreign office who took part in the conference.

This book, writes the official, "has all the information concerning the projects of the different Latin American countries, in regard to the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, that were presented in the conference of Chapultepec . . ." as a basis for action now being taken at the San Francisco conference.

While in Mexico City last summer, Miss DeCou stayed at the home of the Mexican official, and had written to him in the hope that he might speak at an assembly on the U. of O. campus. Unable to come, he sent the gift.

ODE Staff Plans Annual Banquet at Eugene Hotel

By WINIFRED ROMTVEDT

They might be called the hardest-working people on the campus; at least they keep it up day after day, with no grades, no pay. But they do have a daily paper to show for their efforts; sometimes they are very proud of it, and sometimes they feel that the results are below par.

This "gang," the staff of the Oregon Daily Emerald, and their guests, will celebrate the completion of another year of tabloid journalism on Friday, June 1. The medium will be their annual banquet at the Eugene hotel, at 6 p.m. in the assembly room. There the journalists will indulge in what they enthusiastically call "food." Awards and introduction of next year's staff will be in order.

Annamae Winship, Emerald business manager, announces that all "Shackrats" who wish to take advantage of the "free food" should check their names on lists posted in the business office and in room 7, journalism building.

Correction

In an Emerald editorial yesterday it was stated that the system of using the registrar's records for the poll books was new this year. This was a mistake, as the same system was used last year. However, in the 1943 elections news bureau records were used.

Sentimental Star Brings Opera to Igloo

By MARYAN HOWARD

Rise Stevens, lovely Metropolitan Opera star who will be heard here Saturday evening at 8:15 p.m. in McArthur court, is a distinguished young lady who boasts two small dots over the "e" in her first name (pronounced Ree-suh), a handsome soldier husband and a Fashion Academy award as best dressed opera star. Born in New York City of Norwegian and American parents, she has been singing ever since she appeared as a 10-year-old prima donna on a local radio program.

Miss Stevens, in private life, Mrs. Walter Szurovy, stands 5 feet 7 inches tall, weighs 135 pounds, has brown eyes, peach-tinted skin, and light brown hair, shining with golden lights. Her whims are of the moment, her tastes classic. She loves fine cashmere sweaters, lush suedes, pears, sterling silver, and crystal glasses slim as butterflies' wings. Extreme heights make her dizzy; oceans make her philosophic. She likes the blue of Wedgewood china, the vastness of sandy beaches, and the sentimentality of family albums. She cries when she's happy. She likes to swim and walk, and loves company.

Owens Poodle

Miss Stevens owns a black miniature French poodle, whose actual name is "L'Ami Noir," but whom she calls "Lamby." She dotes on the scent of jasmine and relishes maraschino cherries. Her hobby is collecting good luck mascots, and she numbers among her treasures a Mickey Mouse, a big and little Pinocchio, a pink and white rabbit, a pair of baby shoes, the third little pig, and her latest acquisition, a hyacinth-colored hippopotamus. She fills her home with gaily-colored flower pots brimming with cascading ivy and bristling cacti.

Just last year Miss Stevens was again approached by movie scouts who offered her another chance at Hollywood, and this time she ac- (Please turn to page four)
