

Joseph James, Negro Tenor, To Give Concert

Joseph James, negro tenor, will appear in concert Tuesday, October 16 in the school of music auditorium. The program is being sponsored by members of Phi Beta, women's national fraternity of music and speech, for benefit of the Phi Beta scholarship fund.

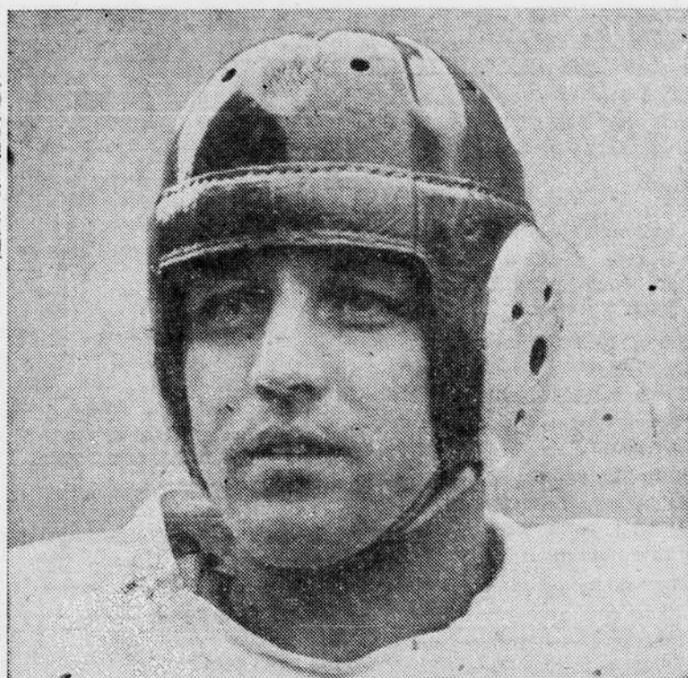

Joseph James has made his voice what it is today by hard work. He has been singing since he was twelve years old but hard circumstances forced him into many by-paths—by-paths labelled "hod-carrier," "pick-and-shovel worker," "waiter," "bus-boy," "Pullman car-cleaner," and "factory worker."

Dr. John H. Stehn, acting dean of the school of music, speaks highly of the Negro tenor. He says, "I had the pleasure of hearing Joseph James in recital at Mills college in 1944, summer. Although his voice is not large, it is of excellent quality and his sincerity, artistry, and excellent repertoire brought the enthusiastic acclaim of the audience. The members of the Budapest String quartet heard the recital and were very complimentary in their remarks. I feel that Phi Beta is rendering a distinct service to the students in the school of music and to music lovers of this community in bringing Mr. James to Eugene."

Excellent recommendations were also given from the music faculty at Stanford, Mills college, and the University of California where recent concerts have been held.

Both the alumnae and active chapters are sponsoring the concert.

First Postwar Home Game Nets 33-7 Score for Oregon

By Tom Riley

There was no doubt in any mind last Saturday afternoon who won the ball game, with both the statistics and the 33 to 7 score in favor of the green and lemon. The expression, "where's Jake?" still held true against the Vandals from Idaho. Every time Oregon's Jake carried the ball the whole Idaho team was looking for the streak of "Leicht." Although Leicht had only 25 minutes of playing time credited to him, it was enough time to help put three touchdowns across.

The first touchdown came 3 minutes after the game had started. Leicht threw a 6 point pass to left end Warberg, who captured it on his own two and stepped across. Bill Abbey missed his place kick next, and the two teams took their respective places for the kick-off!

Halts Buses To OSC

Unless the prevailing bus strike comes to an unexpected end, transportation to the Oregon State-Oregon game at Corvallis Saturday will have to be handled almost entirely by private automobiles, a Greyhound bus official said Monday. According to the representative of the Greyhound Lines "absolutely nothing is moving," and the termination of the walkout has not been determined. Until notice of the end of the strike is received, there will be no buses available to the students.

'Y' Will Hold Services At Museum Thursday

This year's members of the YWCA will attend the traditional recognition services at 6:45 Thursday evening. Girls planning to go will meet outside of Susan Campbell hall at 6:45 and proceed to the art museum for the candlelight service. Upon their arrival, candles will be given to each new member, who in turn will light theirs from one held by "Y" President Mary Corrigan. The Vesper Choir will sing on the steps of the museum during the ceremony.

The formal closing of the YWCA membership drive marked a total of 628 members, according to Miss Lois Greenwood, executive director. Phi Beta Phi was first to complete the drive, followed by Alpha Delta Pi, Alpha Gamma Delta, Chi Omega, Sigma Kappa, Gamma Phi Beta and Delta Zeta.

A number of students indicated interest in becoming members of the YWCA, but have not yet completed their registration. This may be done this week at the bungalow.

The YWCA is open to all University women, and the membership fee is only a dollar a year.

Puddles Lacking for 'Puddles'

By CAROLYN ROMTVEDT
"I'm disappointed because there were no puddles to wade in at Saturday's game, and how is a gal going to live up to a name of "Puddles" if there are none provided?" asked the Oregon Ducks' new mascot with a hiss and a couple of quacks.

Traditionally all Oregon students have web-feet, but the illustrious Miss Puddles didn't have to develop them after arriving on the campus. She came via an editorial in the Register Guard from Karl Orloss's place on Lake Drive. Incidentally, he gets two tickets to the Washington game.

When asked how she got her name, this counterpart of Daisy Duck explained, "When you think of rain, you think of puddles, and when you think of puddles, you think of ducks, so (quack) what could I do?" However, Jim McClintoch and Bill Gross, her official custodians at Mill lodge, had thought of names such as Angleita and Myrtle until they looked at the bottom of Puddles' box and nothing but Puddles would do.

Although the mill race which is handy to the house she lives in would literally be a duck's paradise, Puddles has not been allowed to use it at her leisure as she might head for her former home. She has to be content with dabbling around in a cake pan at present.

Her eating habits are not quite like other students. Her diet is greens and specially prepared duck food. The fellows think that after she has gotten a little more worldly wise, she'll demand a meal ticket and perhaps get used to such delicacies as hamburgers and cokes.

No alarm clocks are necessary in Mill Lodge as residents are awakened by a loud quacking and hissing. The first night Bill and Jim had her in their room, but complications ensued and it was necessary to oust her to a refrigerator box.

Other members of the house looked forward to her coming with visions of fried or boiled duck-eggs. Puddles refuses to lay any eggs and the fellows have to be content with ordinary hen fruit.

At the rally last Friday night the new mascot made her debut. At Saturday's game, she was paraded before the grandstands on a specially designed leash by the rally squad.

Jordis Benke, Phi Phi, donated the harness which once belonged to a dog named Smedley.

Jim and Bill plan to make the mascot a traditional affair like the Beaver at Oregon State.
