Hit 'em Hard Says Chief

By LEONARD TURNBULL

"He's nearly too good-natured a guy, but get him riled up, then wow, waatch hi mhit 'em"—seems to be the general opinion among members of the University of Oregon varsity football squad concerning Oliver "Chief" Pease, hard plugging Crow Indian tackle from Lodgegrass, Montana.

A six-foot 200-pounder, with high cheek bones and piercing eyes indicative of his race, Pease is a model of reserved politeness. Early this fall term at a training table meal, footballers stared with blank astonishment as one of their number, a hawkish-faced tackle, left the table with an "excuse me, please." Erectness in the best ball-room style gains comments when Pease glides on hardwood dance floors.

Oliver Pease first entered earthily hunting grounds on Lodgegrass Crow Indian Reservation near Billings, Montana, July 23, 1921. During early youth he hunted, fished, stomped in war dances with 1800 blood brothers.

The pigskin career of Pease began at Hardin high school in Montana. Rugged line work during his last season netted a selection as candidate for all-state honors, but low conference standing of the Hardin eleven deflated his hopes.

Jobs ranging from putting in water works at an airport to work with Montana highway department after his graduation from high school. Tall timber country in Oregon beckoned Pease from his wanderings. He was enrolled at Linfield college in McMinnville, Oregon, for a year and a half, with basketball the only athletic menu.

Pease donned Lemon and Green colors during early days of September this year on enrolling here as a sophomore in physical education.

As for the coming clash with Oregon State, "Chief" Pease's comment is, "We'll do our best."

Millions of years ago, much of Australia was beneath the sea.

Rival Grid Elevens Await Grudge Tilts

Victory bells will toll in major western college campus belfries this Saturday night denoting victors in crucial clashes among traditionally rival schools in California, Oregon and Washington.

Favored Oregon Webfoots are billed for a short trip to meet Oregon State College at Corvallis in the 7th renewal of an old feud. Pre-game favorites have toppled over heavily in the past when the two schools met in all-out efforts for victory. Comparative scores give nod to the Ducks this year but any "civil war" has its ups and downs with final decision resting on flame and smoke bursting out timers pistol at end of game.

Huskies Meet Cougars

Washington will be closely watched by sports scribes on the Pacific Coast as another win decision is fought for by elevens from University of Washington and Washington State. Washington State enters with a slight edge over their neighbors in comparative scores. Cougars have two wins in black column with none in red against them. Huskies have one game on each side of the ledger.

Down in California UCLA is dated the tetam to-beat in a home game as they tangle with the University of California. High stepping backs and a charging forward wall build the UCLA grid men to top position in sport writers eyes. The Bears, however, have taken on a hard polish with bolstering effect of three recently discharged veterans joining the squad for what Coach Buck Shaw hope is a winning combination.

Trojans Lead Coast

Tied for top of the mark rating in Pacific Coast conference standings, the University of Southern California Trojans go way down south to San Diego for a game with service men all-stars of the naval training camp. Highly touted Trojans are favored in the college men-navy clash but outcome experts rake many a palm across brow before giving the nod. The training camp eleven have a galaxy of former collegiate tsars on their roster and at any time oil may be dropped in the right places for a smooth clicking, high scoring crew.

Tapering off to the East, the University of Idaho open their home schedule in a tilt with Farragut Naval Training and Distribution Center. Vandals will enter the setto prepped for a comeback after dropping first two games of the season by lop-sided scores. In picking the favorite, the problem of how well the navy all-stars will work together again comes to fore. It is a toss-up frey with maybe a little more weight on the Idaho side of the scales.

Outstanding service game of the week brings together two powerhouse teams as the 4th Air Force undefeated eleven meets nationally famous St. Mary's Pre-Flight in San Francisco. Scoring promises to be heavy in the all-service tilt, as both squads chalk up names on rosters of brilliant college ball carriers and hefty linemen of by-gone days. The 4th Air Force is given a slight edge over the navy men.

Elcstered by the return of backfield ace Wedemeyer, St. Mary's College is rated the team most likely to produce more touchdowns in Saturdays' game with College of Pacific. Scoring punch has been lacking in crucial moments for the Galloping Gael in other games this esason, but ball-totin' Wedemeyer is slated to give College of Pacific many headaches.
